

THE CILAPPATIKARAM

Prof. V. R. Ramachandra Dikshitar, M.A.,

OTHER BOOKS BY THE SAME AUTHOR

Gupta Polity
Hindu Administrative Institution
Lalitha Cult
Matsya Purana - A Study
Mauryan Polity - authority
Moonram Kulothunga Cholan-in Tamil
Origin and spread of the Tamils
Pre-Historic South India
Some Aspects of Vayu Purana
Southern India and China
Studies in Tamil Literature and History
War in Ancient India

Books Edited By the Author

‘India Varalarruc curukkam’
(History of India)
‘Karnataka Rajakkal Savistara Charittram’
Selected South Indian Inscriptions
Ramachandra Dikshitar and Sundaram Iyer
Ed. “Bharadvaja Siksh” Purana Index - Vol. I
 ” - Vol. II
 ” - Vol. III

Books Translated by the Author

Tirukkural of Tiruvalluvar
(In Roman Transliteration) Part I
Tirukkural of Tiruvalluvar—English Translation
NAG, Kalidas ‘Les Theories Diplomatiques in Ancient Indi

THE CILAPPATIKARAM

TRANSLATED
WITH AN INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

By
Prof V R RAMACHANDRA DIKSHITAR, MA

WITH FOREWORD BY JULES BLOCH AND
Prof K R SRINIVASA IYENGAR

THE SOUTH INDIA SAIVA SIDDHANTA WORKS
PUBLISHING SOCIETY, TINNEVELLY, LIMITED
1/140, PRAKASAM SAALAI, MADRAS-600 001.

1978

© Janaki Ammal Ramachandra Dikshitar (1907)

1978 THE SOUTH INDIA SAIVA SIDDHANTA WORKS
PUBLISHING SOCIETY, TINNEVELLY, LIMITED.

Branches:

Tirunelveli-6

Madurai-1

Colmbatore-1

Kumbakonam-1

Tiruchirappalli-2

Ed 1 1939

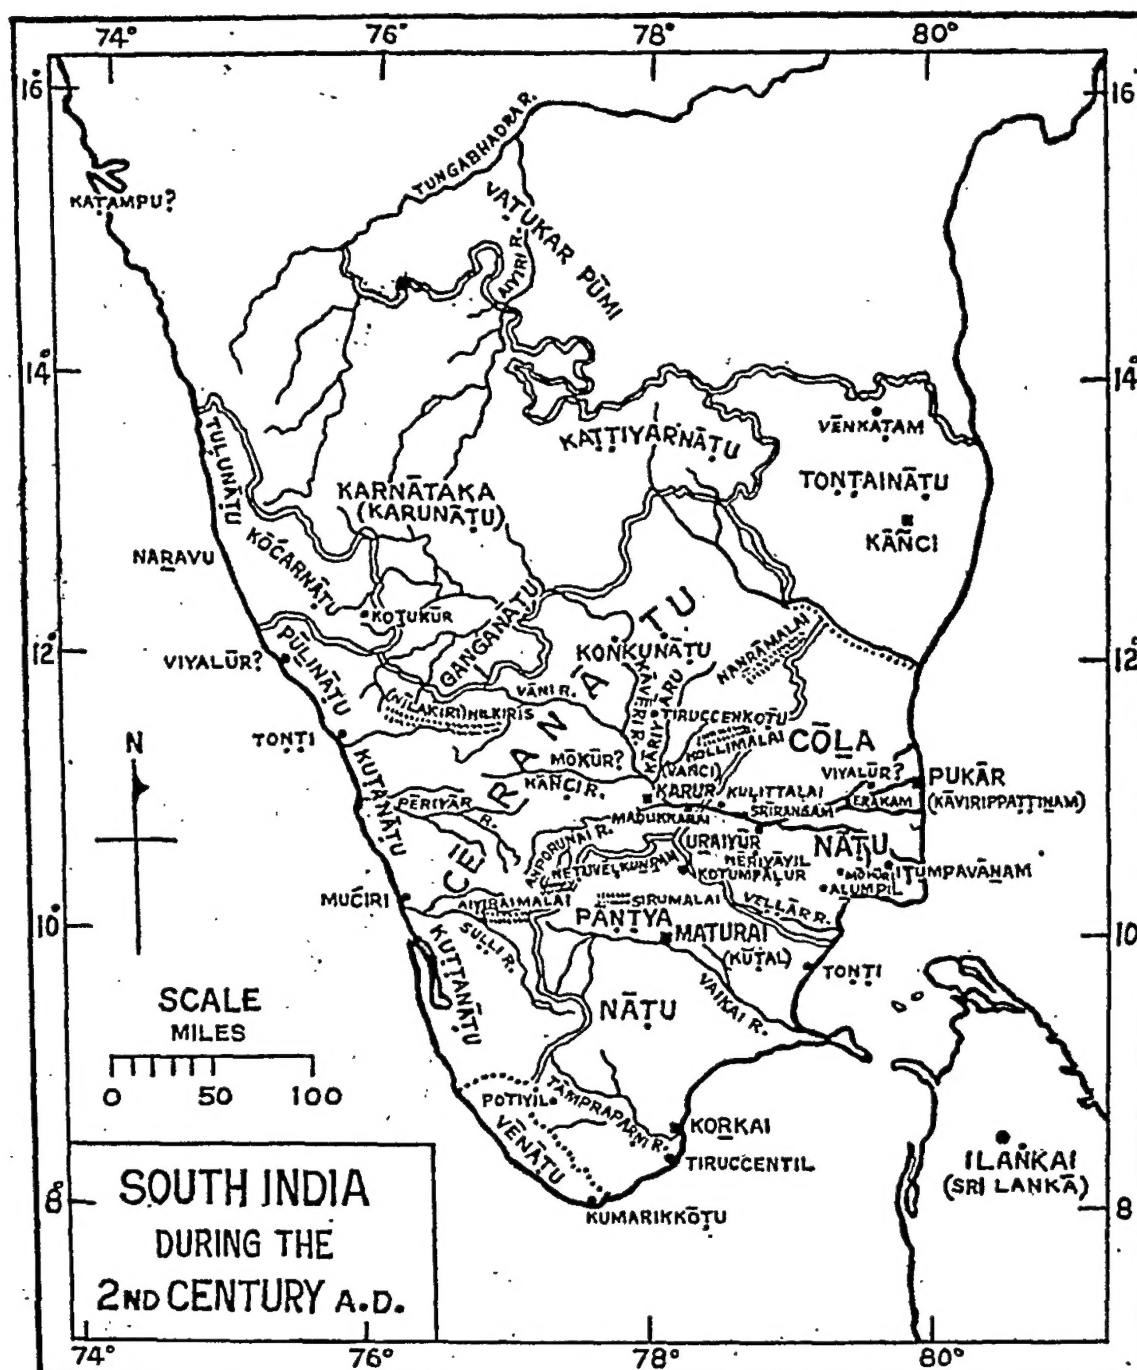

Ed 2 (Kazhagam) January 1978

Publication No. 1673

O31,1C82
111N78

THE GILAPPATIKARAM

Appar Achakam, Madras-1. (1/-)

KANNAKI

INTRODUCTION

I

THE NAME

The term Cilappatikāram is made up of two words, Cilampu and atikāram. Literally the title means 'the story that centres around a cilampu or anklet'. The hero and the heroine of the story, Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki, set out for Madurai to dispose of a cilampu and thereby raise the capital needed to pursue a trade. In the bazaar street of Madurai Kōvalan meets the state goldsmith. The state goldsmith who has stolen the queen's anklet (similar to that in Kōvalan's hand) reports to the king that he has found the thief. The king blindly believes the goldsmith and has poor Kōvalan executed. The heroine proves to the king her husband's innocence by breaking open her other anklet and showing that the contents of her anklets are different from those of the queen. The Pāṇṭiyan king dies of grief on realizing his blunder in having ordered the execution of Kōvalan without proper investigation. Kaṇṇaki destroys the city of Madurai by fire to avenge the execution of her husband, and is finally proclaimed the goddess of chastity. As the story thus centres round the cilampu, it can appropriately be named the Epic of the Anklet.

One among the five peruṅkāppiyams (mahakavyas of Sanskrit literature), the Cilappatikāram may come under the category of toṭarnilaicceyyuḷ and in it we find iyal, icai, and nāṭakam as its chief characteristics. Iyal, icai, and nāṭakam mean, respectively, Literary Tamil, Music, and the Drama. There will be no two opinions about the excellence of the literary Tamil of the epic; and as regards the other two characteristics, icai and nāṭakam, the work may be described as a model of ancient Tamil musical and dramatic composition. A wealth of material is found scattered throughout the work. One is struck with wonder at the icaippāṭṭu or the lyric songs in which the author not infrequently indulges. The songs of Kōvalan and Mātavi on the seaside (kānalvari) are full of lyric charm. Equally charming are the songs sung in honour of the deity at the Aiyyaikōṭṭam, the songs of the āycciyar (cowherdresses) in their kuravaikkūttu, and the songs of the hill-women in honour of Murukan (Subrahmaṇya).

Though iyal and icai are prominent in the pages of the work, the epic contains positive elements which go to make up a dramatic composition, with the result that it can also be styled, appropriately, a nāṭakakkāppiyam. Adopting the modern terminology for the classification of dramatic literature, we may say that this epic is a tragic-comedy. The tragic elements preponderate in the story. The separation of Kaṇṇaki from her husband, her ominous dream, the equally fearful dream of Kōvalan, the journey of the couple through wild forests, the unjust execution of Kōvalan, and Kaṇṇaki's inconsolable distress, the Pāṇṭiyan's great grief at the injustice perpetrated by him, the plucking out by Kaṇṇaki of one of her breasts, the burning of the city, the death of the Pāṇṭiyan king and queen, are all tragic elements in the story. Notwithstanding these tragic elements which evoke the reader's sympathy and tears, the ending is happy. Both the wronged persons attain Heaven in a celestial car surrounded and celebrated by gods.

THE FORM

The form adopted is that of the kāvya or kāppiyam of Tamil literature. There are excellent descriptions of rivers like the Vaikai and the Kāvēri, of cities like Pukār and Madurai, of forms of dancing like the kuravaikkūttu, of gods like Viṣṇu, of wild forests, of the celebration of marriages, etc., all affording data for reconstructing the ancient Tamil social life. Iḷaṅkō-Aṭikaḷ himself calls the work in his preface (patikam) pāṭṭuṭaiceyyuḷ or uraiyi-taiyṭṭa pāṭṭuṭaiceyyuḷ. This Tamil phrase is a free rendering of the Sanskrit term campu. Compositions like this contain at frequent intervals uraippāṭṭu (rhetorical prose). A good example of campu literature in Tamil is the Pāratam of Peruntēvaṇār.

II

THE STORY

In the fifties of the second century A.D. there lived in the city of Pukār, which was the capital city of the great Karikālaccōḷaṇ, two merchant princes who had respectively a son and a daughter. The son went by the name of Kōvalaṇ, and the daughter by that of Kaṇṇaki. At their respective ages of sixteen and twelve, their parents had them married according to the fire-rites prescribed in Vēdic literature. Soon a separate establishment was set up for them and the young couple spent sometime together happily. One day when Kōvalaṇ was passing through the busy streets of Pukār, he happened to cast his eyes upon Mātavi, a charming courtesan of the city, who had just won her laurels from the king of the land. Kōvalaṇ having fallen in love with her, left his home and lived with the courtesan until he had wasted upon her the whole of his wealth. There then came the festival sacred to Indra, the God of Heaven. All Pukār celebrated it with pomp and splendour. The lovers spent their evenings in the park on the seashore entertaining themselves with music. A song of Mātavi made Kōvalan suspect that she had thoughts of another lover. This caused a change in his feelings towards her. With wounded pride he left her, as he intended, for good. He came home and opened his heart to his sorrow-stricken wife. He explained the circumstances he was in, and told her of his resolution to leave the city for Madurai to earn his livelihood. Kaṇṇaki who was a strict observer of the rules laid down for chaste wives, and who practised them to their very letter, welcomed the suggestion, and sought permission to follow him wherever he might go. He spoke to her of the difficulties of traversing, on foot forest belts and mountain-tracts full of wild animals and haunted by evil spirits bent on mischief. All this could not persuade her to stay at home. Her only desire was to share his weal and woe, and he finally assented to her earnest wish.

With Kaṇṇaki, whose only remaining jewels were the pair of anklets, he set out for Madurai early: before day-break so that no one might come to know of their whereabouts. His idea was to dispose of a cilampu in the bazaar at Madurai, and with the capital raised thereby to set up some business. Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki passed along the northern bank of the Kāvēri towards the west and reached a grove. Here they met Kavunti, the celebrated woman ascetic doing penance, and bowed to her. She offered to accompany them and show them the right path to Madurai and they gladly accepted her kind offer. All the three crossed over to the southern bank of the Kāvēri by boat and reached Uraiṇūr, the other capital of the Cōla kingdom.

Having stayed a day there, the three proceeded towards Madurai. On the way Kōvalan met a certain Kaucikan who was bringing a message of regret from Mātavi to Kōvalan. Kaucikan communicated to Kōvalan Mātavi's protestations of her love for him. But Kōvalan sent the messenger to his own parents and asked him to deliver the same letter to them so that they might be relieved of their poignant distress at his secret departure. Passing on, the couple and Kavunti reached the river Vaikai and crossing it by boat, they reached the outskirts of the city of Madurai. Here they came upon Mātari, a cowherdess of the city, to whom Kavunti introduced Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki. She was requested to accommodate them until Kōvalan was able to stand on his own legs. To this Mātari agreed, and the couple repaired to her cottage. Kavunti chose to stay outside the city discussing questions of religion and philosophy with sages residing there.

Mātari left Kaṇṇaki in the company of her daughter Aiyai. Helped by Aiyai, Kaṇṇaki prepared dinner for herself and her husband of which the couple partook. Kōvalan then took one of her anklets and went towards the bazaar to sell it. It was an inauspicious hour when he started, but of this he was not aware. In the bazaar he met the state goldsmith to whom he showed the anklet and offered to sell it for a fair price.

This goldsmith, who had stolen the queen's anklet sometime before, thought it a good opportunity to accuse Kōvalan of the theft of the queen's jewel and proclaim himself innocent. He therefore readily consented to Kōvalan's proposal, and leaving him in his cottage, went post-haste to the palace, informed the king that he had found out the thief who had stolen the queen's anklet, and handed it over to the king. Without bestowing a moment's thought on the matter, the king ordered his executioners to behead the thief. Followed by the goldsmith, the executioners came to the cottage where Kōvalan̄ was. Moved by his innocent looks they hesitated at first to carry out the king's order, until the goldsmith treated them to a lecture on the theory and practice of thieving. Thereupon one among the party of executioners, more cruel than his companions, beheaded Kōvalan̄.

In the meantime Mātari, who noticed evil omens portending danger, arranged for a kuravaikkūttu in honour of Viṣṇu and Pinṇai. The kūttu being over, Mātari went to the river for her bath. There she heard people talking about the slaughter of the innocent Kōvalan̄. She shook with fear, ran home and informed her kith and kin. Noticing the sorrow-stricken faces, and hence feeling uneasy, Kaṇṇaki asked them to give her news of her husband. Though none of them had the heart to break the shocking news, her persistence made one of them yield to her repeated entreaties. The rude shock, and the agony which she could hardly endure distracted her. She raved like a mad woman, fell down on the earth, rose up and sobbed aloud in anguish. Though it was late in the night she went to the bazaar to have a look at her husband. She found him in a pool of blood gushing out of his wounds. Her grief knew no bounds. She cried till she seemed to see Kōvalan̄ rise up to go to Heaven saying to her 'Stay here'.

She could no longer endure the wrong done to her innocent husband. All her grief was now turned into anger against the king. She went to the palace and demanded proper justice at his hands. She narrated her case, proved by her other anklet how the one supposed to have been stolen by Kōvalan was hers and not the queen's, and showed how the goldsmith had deceived him. At this the just and repentant king fell into a swoon which ended in his death. It was no consolation to poor Kaṇṇaki whose innocent husband had been irretrievably wronged. She plucked out her left breast and threw it over the city cursing that the city be consumed by flames. The god of fire brought destruction to all except the Brahman sages, cows, chaste women, children and the aged. The guardian deity of Madurai at this time presented herself before Kaṇṇaki and narrated to her how in his previous birth Kōvalan was Paratan, in the service of Vasu, king of Cingapura, who had killed an innocent merchant, Cangaman by name, suspecting him to be a spy, and that was why he now had this fate. Asked as to Kaṇṇaki's future, the deity replied that on the fourteenth day from that hour she would go to Heaven invited by her husband in a celestial car.

Kaṇṇaki thereupon left Madurai and proceeding west to the Malainādu reached Murukavēl-kunram (the hill sacred to Murukā) which she ascended. There she stood under the shade of a Vēnkai tree to the wonder of the people of the place, most of whom were Kuravās. When every one of them was looking at her, Kaṇṇaki left the place in the celestial car for Heaven. This they reported to Ceṅkuṭṭuvan, their king. The poet Sāttanār, who was there, narrated the events that had happened in Madurai. The queen desired that a temple should be set up in honour of Kaṇṇaki. Ceṅguṭṭuvan who had been thinking for a long time of leading a military expedition to the north to subdue the refractory chieftains there, resolved to secure a block of stone from the Himalayas to carve out an image of the Pattinikkaṭavu! as they called her. So he started on his northern expedition through the Nilgiris.

In the meantime there was a famine in the Pāṇṭiyan kingdom due to continuous drought. Iḷāṇceliyan, the Pāṇṭiyan at Korkai, offered a sacrifice of 1,000 goldsmiths to the Pattinikkaṭavuḷ, and the country had plentiful showers of rain. Hearing this, the kings of Koṅku-maṇṭalam, of Ceylon, and of Uraiyūr dedicated temples to Kaṇṇaki and instituted daily worship and the festivals. At this time, it may be noted, Gajabāhu was the king of Ceylon and Pérunarkīḷi was the Cōḷa king at Uraiyūr.

After defeating the northern kings Kaṇaka and Vijaya, Seṅkuṭṭuvan brought a stone from the Himalayas and after bathing it in the Ganges returned home. A temple was consecrated to the Pattinikkaṭavuḷ and was endowed for daily worship. The consecration ceremony was attended by eminent kings including those of Mālva and Ceylon. After this, on the advice of the Brahman Māṭalan, the king engaged himself in the performance of Yajnas or Vedic sacrifices and spent the evening of his life in peace and prayer.

III

ITS PLACE IN THE CAṆKAM WORKS

To find a way out of the tangled forest of South Indian chronology is a very intricate task. This is especially true of the Caṅkam works. The question of the dates of the Caṅkam works has been discussed.¹ Roughly speaking the Caṅkam epoch may be assigned to a period commencing with the fifth century B. C. and ending with the fourth century A. D. The Cilappatikāram belongs to this epoch and is an accredited Caṅkam work, as is also the other work of that class, the Maṇimēkalai.

¹ V. R. R. Dikshitar Studies in Tamil Literature and History, 2nd ed., 1936.

Both these belong to the category of the great-Epics (mahākāvyas) of which five are distinguished. These twin epics, the Cilappatikāram and the Maṇimēkalai, can be likened in certain respects to the Ramayana and the Mahabharata, and are invaluable sources for re-constructing the history of the ancient Tamil land.

The date of the classic deserves an independent examination. This epic, which is very ancient in age, is quoted as an authority even by ancient commentators like the commentator of the Iṭaiyaṇār Akapporuḷ and Uraiya-ciriyar (Iḷampūraṇar). In the use of choice words and in terseness of expressions the book is unrivalled. Yet the style is simple though polished. Ornate in expression, it has also grace and simplicity. It has already been mentioned that this epic is a treatise on the threefold classification of the Tamil language — Literary Tamil, Music and the Drama. Beginning with the drama, we have uraippāṭṭu or rhetorical prose compositions. The varied forms of musical composition such as kāṇalvari (sea-song), vēṭṭuvavari (hill-song), arṇuvvari (river-song), ūcalvari (song to accompany swinging), and kantukavari (song sung by girls while playing with balls) are worthy of note in the pages of the work. The distinguishing traits of the literary Tamil—veṇpā and akavarṇpā or akaval—are prominently seen. Of all the metres used in the poem, akavarṇpā or blank verse is the metrical form most frequently used.¹ Thus the Cilappatikāram is an excellent example of ilakkiyam or Tamil poetry. It may be noted in this connexion that the early works on music and drama have been lost beyond recovery. The Cilappatikāram may, however, be said to represent in a way the earlier musical and dramatic pieces. It thus takes a legitimate place among the extant Caṅkam works and is very valuable to the historian of South India. But the most conclusive argument in respect of the epic's place in the Caṅkam category is that the friend and companion of the author of the Cilappatikāram, Kūlavāṇikaṇ Cittalai Cāttanār, is a Caṅkam celebrity. And this Cāttanār is the reputed author of the Maṇimēkalai, which is a continuation of the theme contained in the Cilappatikāram. A futile attempt has recently been made to prove that these epics were post-Caṅkam works.¹ But this militates against the fact that the author of the Maṇimēkalai belonged to the same age as poets like Paraṇar² and Kapilar. We know that these two are among the most distinguished names mentioned in connexion with the traditional third Caṅkam. This, above all, assigns to the Cilappatikāram a rank among the Caṅkam works.

1 Cita., preface p. 9; Tolk. 'Ceyyul', the gloss of Iḷampūraṇar on sutra 157.

One conclusive evidence for the second century A. D. as the date of the Cilappatikāram is the complete silence of the epic with regard to the Pallavas of Kañci. This epic as well as the Maṇimēkalai speaks of Kañci in more than one place, but does not mention anywhere the Pallavas themselves or any of their kings. The earliest of the Pallava charters—the records in Prakrit—are three in number: the Mayidavolu plate, the Hirahadagalli plates, and the British Museum plates. These have been published in the volumes of the Epigraphia Indica, and range over a period circa A. D.

1 E.g. P. T. Srinivasa Aiyangar's History of the Tamils, ch. XXIX; K. N. Sivaraja Pillai's The Chronology of the Early Tamils, p. 42. The latter says that he is mainly guided by the literary test.

2 For Paraṇar's reference to Ceṅkuṭṭuvan see Patir̥r̥, fifth Ten; Puṛam̥, st. 369; Akam̥, st. 212, etc.

200-350. This means that we have inscriptional evidence of the early Pallavas and the earliest of them could be dated from A.D. 200.¹ The evidence of Caṅkam literature shows that, up to the occupation of the city by the Pallavas, Kañci was one of the northern outposts of the Cōlā kingdom, and was the capital of the Cōlā Viceroy. In the age of the Cilappatikāram the Cōlā Viceroy was Toṇṭamāṇ Iḷam-Tiraiyan celebrated in the Perumpaṇārruppatai by Uruttiraṇ Kaṇṇāṇār. Iḷam-Tiraiyan was a chief of the Tiraiyar who preceded the Pallavas at Kañci, and who were subordinate to the Cōlās in the second century A.D. Thus the Cilappatikāram which actually refers to Kañci, does not mention the Pallavas even indirectly, while subsequent literature represented by the Tēvāram and the Tivyaprapantam often makes references to the Pallava kings. The inference is therefore conclusive that the Pallava kings came to reign at Kañci after the composition of the Cilappatikāram. Otherwise it is difficult to understand the silence of the epic and other Caṅkam works on the Pallavas or any member of that dynasty.²

THE DATE OF CERAN CENKUTTUVAN

A stanza in the *Puraṇānūru*³ and a few in the *Akanānūru*⁴ compared with a reference in the *Cilappatikāram*⁵ show that the early history of the Cērās can be carried

1 Ep. Ind., Vol. XV, pp. 246-55, 'Two Pallava Copperplate Grants'. ed. H. Krishna Sastri.

2 R. Gopalan, The Pallavas of Kañci, p. 9 ff. (Madras University, 1928).

3 St. 2. 4 St 65, 168, and 233. 5 Canto xxiii, ll. 55-60.

back to an epoch before the Mahabharata war. For we hear of one Utiyañcēral, a Cēra king who acted as the host to the combatants of that war. An analytical study of the Patirruppattu, so far as the political data contained in it are concerned, furnishes us with ample material to reconstruct the chronology of the three ancient South Indian dynasties, and particularly that of the early Ceras. Of the Ten Tens (Patirruppattu), the first and the last have not been traced, and we must congratulate the talented editor, Dr. V. Swaminatha Aiyar, for presenting us with the available eight Tens, all very important as preserving in a nutshell an account of the ancestry of the Cērā Kings, to whom these poems have been dedicated. The following is the list of kings as they occur in the Patirruppattu.

1. Imayavarampan (also Kuṭavar Kōmān and Kuṭakkō) Netuñcēralātan
2. Palyanaic-celkelu-kuṭṭuvan
3. Kaḷaṅkāykkanni Nārmuṭiccēralātan
4. Kaṭalpirakkotṭiya Ceṅkuṭṭuvan
5. Ātukōṭpāṭṭuccēralātan
6. Celvakkatuṅkō-Vāliyātan
7. Peruñceral-Irumporai
8. Iḷañcēral-Irumporai

As regards their relationship the following information is available from the epilogue attached to each of the respective eight Tens. Imayavarampan Netuñcēralātan is the son of Utiyañcēral and Vēliyan-Vēnmal Nallini. Palyānaic-celkelu-kuṭṭuvan is said to be the younger brother of Imayavarampan. Nārmuṭiccēralātan is the son of Cēralātan and Vēlāvikkōman Padumandevī. Senkuṭṭuvan is said to be the son of Kuṭavarkōman-Nedumceralatan and Nārcōnai, daughter of Cōlan Maṇakkilḷi. Ātukōṭpāṭṭuc-cēralātaṇ is the son of Kuṭakko-Neṭuñcēralātaṇ and Vēlavikkōmāntēvi. Celvakkatūṅkō is said to be the son of Antuvaṇ and Poraiyanperuntēvi, that is, the daughter of Orutandai or Orūutandi. Peruñcēral is the son of Celvakkatūṅkō and Vēlavikkōmāṇ Padumandēvi. Ilañcēral is said to be the son of Kuṭṭuvaṇ (Peruñcēral) Irumporai¹ and Vēṇmāl-Antuvaṇ Ceḷḷai, the daughter of Maiyūrkiḷāṇ, perhaps the minister of Ilañcēral.²

The genealogy as mentioned in these patikams has made Professor S. S. Bharati draw the conclusion that Marumakkattāyam was an ancient practice of the old Cēra monarchs, and the present practice is only a relic of the ancient custom.³

As against this inference, Pandit M. Raghava Aiyangar has made out a strong case and proved how the interpretation does not admit of Marumakkattāyam but only of Makkattāyam, of son succeeding father, as in the other parts of the country.⁴ The *Cilappatikāram*⁵ mentions Vēṇmāl as the wife of the Cēra king Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ, and the full name seems to be Ilañkō-vēṇmāl. According to a note to the patikam of the fifth Ten, Seṅkuṭṭuvaṇ had a son.

1 Ilañcēral is the son and not the brother. The expression is similar to Iḷampāncapandavas meaning, sons of the Pandavas.

2 From the patikam of the ninth Ten it is seen that a certain Maiyurkiḷāṇ was the minister of Ilañcēral. The same patikam speaks of a Maiyurkiḷāṇ as his grandfather. Either the two Maiyurkiḷāṇs are different, or the grandfather of Ilañcēral was also his minister.

3 Centamil, Vol. XXVII, No. 4; see also M. Srinivasā Aiyangar, Tamil Studies, p. 103 ff.

4 Cēravēntartāyavalakku in Tamil (1930); see also 'Marumakkattāyam and the Sangam Literature', Z. I. I., Vol. IX, No. 3, p. 255 ff.

5 Canto xxv 1. 5.

Proceeding to find a solution for fixing the date of Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ, we find that Peruṇcēralātan (probably Imayavarampaṇ Neduṇcēralātan) was defeated and wounded in the chest at Veṇṇi, otherwise Veṇṇil,¹ by Karikālā.²

The defeat was so crushing that the Cērā king abdicated his throne.³ The reference in the Akanānūru is positive evidence for establishing the contemporaneity of Karikālā and Imayavarampaṇ, and Karikālā could not therefore have been the contemporary of Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ. In other words the theory that Karikālā and Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ were contemporaries has little to support it. Imayavarampaṇ must have died in the early half of the second century A. D. We know from the Patirruppattu that Imayavarampaṇ and Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ reigned for fifty-eight and fifty years respectively. It would appear that Imayavarampaṇ had two queens and four sons, and one of them, Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ, was his successor. His brother Ilaṅkō-Aṭigaḷ became an ascetic. Of the other two, Nārmuticcēralātan seems to have been in charge of the northern part of the Koṅku kingdom, the region where was the hill Naṇrā,⁴ while Ātukōṭṭattuccēralātan was in charge of the Kuṭṭanaṭu. The last two were princes ruling under the suzerainty of the emperor reigning from Vaṇjikkaruvūr.

For purposes of fixing the date of the epic a beginning must be made from the year A. D. 172 or 173 which is the probable year of the foundation of the Pattiṇi temple at 1 Identified with Kōyilvenni, a village near modern Maṇṇargudi.

2 Akam., st. 55; Puram., st 65 (colophon) and st. 66.

3 The term Vatākkiruntanan in the texts is translated 'committed suicide' by P. T. Srinivasa Aiyangar in History of the Tamils, pp. 335-7.

4 Patirr., patikam to the seventh Ten.

the Cērā capital; for Gajabahu, the king of Ceylon, who attended the consecration ceremony of the temple, came to the throne only in A. D. 171, and we have to assume that he must have visited India after he became king. The question of the Gajabahu synchronism has not found acceptance with the learned author of the History of the Tamils.¹ One argument is that the alternative reading for the word Kayavāku is Kaval, and if the latter reading were adopted, the edifice based on the Gajabahu synchronism would fall to the ground. We must emphasize the word if.

The editor, who has consulted no fewer than eleven manuscripts of the text and fourteen manuscript copies of the commentary, and whose scientific precision and punctillious care in collating the manuscripts cannot be questioned, has not only adopted Kayavāku as the correct reading, but has also shown how there are two Gajabahus mentioned in the Mahavamsa differing in age by a thousand years,² and how Gajabahu I must be the king of Ceylon mentioned in the Varantarumkātai as having been present

1 p. 375, ff.

2 For an inscription of Gajabahu I, 171-193 on the elephants' stables or Ratanapāsāda, see M.A.S.C., Vol. I, No. 2. See also chronological table in B. G. Singe's translation of the second part of the Mahavamsa p. 20. According to this, Gajabahu II ascended the throne in A. D. 1142. Cf. M.A.S.C., Vol. II, No. 1.

Cf. Ep. Z., Vol. III, No. 1, 'Ceylonese chronology', p. 9. Also H. W. Codrington's Short History of Ceylon, pp. 24, 26-34; C.A., Vol. X, p. 115.

This is also the view of investigators on the subject like Seshagiri Sastri, Kanakasabhai, Krishnaswami Aiyangar, and Nilakanta Sastri. It may be noted that Dr. S. K. Aiyangar, (Ancient India, p. 350) has answered the points raised by E. Hultzsch in S.I.I., Vol. II, No. 3, p. 378, with regard to this question.

at the festivities held in honour of Pattinikkaṭavuḷ by Ceṅkuṭṭuvan.

The *Mahāvamsa*¹ says: 'After Vankanāsikatiss's death, his son Gajabāhukagāmaṇi reigned twenty-two years.' He founded a number of viḥāras and stūpās. Dr. Wilhelm Geiger, the learned translator of the *Mahāvamsa*² has furnished in his introduction a list of the ancient kings of Ceylon with the length of their respective reigns both in the Buddhist era and the Christian era. In this list Gajabāhukagāmaṇi figures as the forty-sixth king, ruling from A. D. 171-193.³ This must have been the Gajabāhu who is celebrated in the Cilappatikāram.

It is asked⁴ how a devout follower of the Buddha could embrace a new cult like the Pattinī cult. The answer is simple. In those days the religion followed by monarchs was cosmopolitan in character. There was not much of sectarian rancour. To the people then, God was one and might be worshipped in any shape or form. In the epoch when there was no nice distinction between the established religion of the land and the dissenting sects like the Jains and the Buddhists, it is no wonder that Gajabāhu built a temple in honour of the Pattinikkaṭavuḷ. Among the popular deities in Ceylon, Pattinī, Dēvi figures as the guardian of female chastity. 'Two wooden images of her and her husband in a cave at the Nikawaewa monastery are supposed to date from the eleventh century.'⁵ The most notable of the images of the goddess Pattinī Dēvi is 1 Canto xxxv. pp. 254-5.

2 Pali Text Society, 1912.

3 Dīpa., st. 22, 14 and 28. Mahāvamsa, Intro. p. xxxviii.

4 History of the Tamils, p. 380.

5 V. A. Smith. A History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon, 1911, p. 248. Also H. Parker, Ancient Ceylon, Fig. 272.

an image in bronze, 4 feet 9½ inches in height, discovered in Ceylon and presented to the British Museum in 1830.¹ To deny totally a tradition which receives corroboration from an unexpected quarter, like the Pāli literature of Ceylon, and thus to shake the corner-stone of early South Indian chronology, would be a breach of the historical and critical method. For various reasons into which we need not enter here, the reference in the Cilappatikāram cannot be to Gajabāhu II who figures in the history of Ceylon nearly ten centuries after the time of Gajabāhu I. Thus the Gajabāhu synchronism is explained, and the date of the composition of the Cilappatikāram settled once for all. It was in the second half of the second century after Christ.

At that time (circa A. D. 172) Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was fifty years of age.² Therefore, when he started for the north he was forty-seven, as he had spent three years there. In the light of the statement in the Patirruppattu that he ruled for fifty years, it may be taken roughly that he ascended the throne when he was twenty years of age and must have died about A. D. 192. Ceṅkuṭṭuvan must, therefore, have led the northern expedition about A. D. 168, though these estimates cannot be accepted rigidly.

That Ceṅkuṭṭuvan took nearly three years for his North Indian expedition is evident from the following. While he was still in the north a certain Brahman, Māṭalan by name, sought the audience of His Majesty, and after his conversation with him, the royal astrologer informed him that it was thirty-two months since the latter left his capital.³ Again two years before Ceṅkuṭṭuvan left for the north, Maṇi-

1 See frontispiece.

2 Canto xxviii, 11. 129-30.

3 Canto xxvii, 1. 149.

mēkalai was in Pukar, and when she returned to Vañci after a five years' tour, it is said that it was three years since Ceṅkuṭṭuvan had left for the north. Without going into further details, we may conclude that Imayavarampan ruled from circa A. D. 80-140 and Ceṅkuṭṭuvan from circa A. D. 140-192.

V

CENKUTTUVAN'S ACHIEVEMENTS

The fifth Ten of the Patirruppattu is sung in praise of Cēraṇ Ceṅkuṭṭuvan by the poet Paraṇar. Ceṅkuṭṭuvan became the greatest of the Cēra monarchs. From the patikam can be gathered some knowledge as to his achievements. These can be categorically mentioned here.

- (1) The success over the northern kings in his campaign to the Himalayas to get a stone thereof to carve out an image of the Paṭṭinikkaṭavuḷ.
- (2) The lifting of cattle from the Iṭumbil forest tracts. It is said that on his return from the northern expedition the king spent some time on the outskirts of this forest.¹
- (3) The defeat of Naṇṇaṇ Vēnmāṇ or simply Naṇṇaṇ, the chieftain of the Veṭṭir, and the occupation of his capital Viyalūr.²
- (4) The overthrow of a confederacy of nine Cōḷas at Nērivāyil³ which was near the southern gateway of the ancient Uṟaiyūr.⁴

1 Canto xxviii, l. 118.

2 Canto xxvii, l. 115; Aham., st. 97, 'Māmūlaṇār'.

3 Cantos xxix, ll. 116-7; xxvii, ll. 118-23.

4 Anc. Ind., p. 95; also the commentary of Arumpata-vuraiyācirlyar on Cila., canto xxviii, l. 117.

- (5) The overthrow of seven kings and the wearing of their respective seven garlands in his crown in commemoration of his heroic deed.¹
- (6) His success over the Koṅkar² who can be identified with the Gangas, also called Koṅkudecarājākkaḷ. During this encounter Kotukūr was completely devastated as the Patirruppattu has it.³ There is a Kotukūrnāṭu today in the division of Punṇāṭu of the Mysore state.⁴
- (7) His successful naval engagements and specially the battle of Mōkūr⁵ where the *vēmbu*⁶ or margosa tree of Paḷaiyaṇ was destroyed. It may be noted in passing that his naval engagements were so striking and decisive that he earned the title of Kaṭalpirakkōṭṭiya Vēlkelukuṭṭuvaṇ.⁷ This can appropriately be compared with the statement⁸ made at different places in the Cilappatikāram.

Most of these are corroborated by the Cilappatikāram which gives a detailed account of his expedition to the 1 Canto xxviii, 1. 169; Patirr., st. 45. In these places he is called Elumuṭimārpa.

2 Canto xxv, 11. 152-5.

3 Patikam to the fifth Ten.

4 See M. Raghava Aiyangar, Cēraṇ Ceṇkuṭṭuvaṇ, pp. 28-9; also Ind. Ant., 1889, p. 369.

5 Canto xxvii, 11. 124-6. Patirr., st. 44, 49.

6 The reference to the wearing of the garland of margosa goes to prove that Mōkūr Paḷaiyaṇ was an ally of the Pāṇṭyan king and more probably a general of his. (Maturaikkāñci. 11. 507-8. Akam., st. 346).

7 Patirr., st. 41, 45, 46.

8 e. g. முந்நீரி னுள்புக்கு முவாக் கடம் பெறிந்தான் canto xvii, 'Uḷvariyaḷttu', 3. See canto xxviii, 1. 135; canto xxix, 'Ucal-vari', st. 1.

north to secure a block of stone to make the image of the Goddess of Chastity, and if we are to believe the account in the epic, this was the last of his achievements; for Mātalaṇ has drawn attention¹ to all the six achievements mentioned above.

The poet Paraṇar refers to five of these seven achievements. The two, which are not mentioned by him, are his northern expedition to get a stone for the Pattinī, and his success at the battle of Nērivāyil. If we place his achievements in chronological order these two were his last, and the northern expedition was the last of all. It would be appropriate to say that when Paraṇar sang of this Cēra, he had not undertaken these things. These deeds were done after Paraṇar sang the Patirruppattu. From the absence of any mention by Paraṇar of these last two of his achievements, an endeavour has been made to distinguish Vēlkelukuṭṭuvaṇ from Ceṇkuṭṭuvaṇ.² And in this the correspondence of the five incidents, which marked the earlier activities of the king, has been ignored, with what valid reasons we cannot see. In the writer's opinion, Vēlkelukuṭṭuvaṇ is another name for Ceṇkuṭṭuvaṇ.

VI

AN ESTIMATE OF HIS CHARACTER

Bold and powerful, Ceṇkuṭṭuvaṇ was able to bring under his control not only his own neighbours, the Pāṇṭya and the Cōḷa, but also to carry his conquest so far north as to earn the title of Imayavarampaṇ (literally 'one, the territorial limits of whose empire extended to the Himalayas'). We know his father had carried his arms up to the distant Himalayas and hence came to be distinguished as Imayavarampaṇ Neṭuñcēralātaṇ. Already mention has been made of the achievements which Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ had to his credit, and which entitle him to be ranked with the great emperors of Ancient India. We shall here call attention to a few outstanding traits of his character.

1 Canto xxviii, ll. 114-22.

2 The Chronology of the Early Tamils, pp. 124-5.

The rather horrid detail of his having made the women-folk of Palaiyaṇ drag the margosa tree with a rope made of their twisted hair¹ may be dismissed as a poetic exaggeration, though there may be truth in the statement that he made the northern kings carry the stone for the Pattini on their heads. These details and especially the fact of his making prisoners of the vanquished and the retreating foes, which evoked scathing comments from the Pāṇṭya and the Cōla sovereigns of his time, go to prove that Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ was too severe an avenger of wrongs. The above incidents smack of the asura form of warfare so eloquently described in the Kauṭaliya Arthaśāstra.²

Notwithstanding these incidents we find the king to be God-fearing and possessing a religious bent of mind. He was superstitious and had faith in astrology and astronomy. This is borne out by the fact that he set out on his northern expedition at an auspicious hour. That he was religious is seen from his prayers in the temples of Civa and Viṣṇu on the eve of his historic march to the north.³

Besides, he was a patron of arts and letters. He spent his time in amusements which consisted of dancing and singing. It is said that a number of these dancers went along with him to the north. That this was an ancient war-practice is seen from the Rāmāyaṇa, where it is said that actors and dancing-masters followed the army of Satrugna.¹ He rewarded learned men with presents, some of which were invaluable. The gifts received by Parānar and Māṭalaṇ may be quoted as instances in point. Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ had a fine artistic mind as is seen from the fact that he went all the way to the Himalayas in order to fetch a good stone to carve out an image of Kaṇṇaki.² That he was a follower of the established religion of the land and that he was Kṣatriya by caste are evident from the fact that he engaged himself in the performance of Vedic sacrifices, after the temple was constructed and consecrated to Kaṇṇaki. From this time until his death it appears that he took to a life of ease and peace, penance and prayer, his mind being centred on the study and practice of dharma.³

1 Patikam to the fifth Ten.

2 For details see Ar. Sās. Bk. xii, §1; also V. R. R. Dikshitar, The Mauryan Polity, 1932, p. 129.

3 Canto xxvi, ll. 54-56.

He was a great soldier and a bold warrior. The prowess of his arms was felt throughout the Tamil land, the Cōla and Pāṇṭya being his tributary allies. He carried his sword as far as the Ganges, and brought the whole of India under his suzerainty. According to the Harihara Caturanga, a manuscript on War written by the minister of Pratāparudra, the Kabanda engages in a dance, usually known as the devil dance, whenever a thousand śūras fall dead on the field of battle, or when a śūra kills one thousand able heroes in a battle. Viewed in this light, and from the fact that the Kabanda danced his dance in glee, blessing Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ for the sumptuous food for him and his companions, it transpires that Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ was a śūra and a vīra. With unlimited power at his disposal and being a vigorous ruler, Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ

1 Bk. vii, ch. 64, st. 3.

2 Canto xxv, ll. 115-31.

3 Canto xxx, ll. 170 ff.

was able to keep peace in his vast and diversified empire for a full half-century. This would in itself be ample proof of his greatness. No doubt he is the most memorable figure in the history of ancient Tamil India.

VII

KARIKĀLA IN THE CILAPPATIKĀRAM

Another king much celebrated by Ilankō-Aṭikaḷ next only to Ceṅkuṭṭuvan, is the Cōḷa king Karikāla. If we are to believe the account in the *Poruṇarārruppaṭai*¹ Karikāla was a posthumous child and son of Uruvapahrēr-Iḷaṅcetcenni. He began to reign when he was a mere child. It is said that in the battle of Veṇṇi, Imayavarampaṇ was wounded and the victory was won by the boy Karikāla.² His was a benevolent form of administration.³ His interest in irrigation and consequently in agriculture is seen from his construction of embankments for the Kāvērī as testified to by the Leyden grant,⁴ For this work, it is said that thousands of Ceylonese labourers were employed.

The text of the Cilappatikāram contains three references to Karikāla.⁵ The first reference is to his military prowess. Here he is called Tirumāvaḷavaṇ, which term, it is worthy of note, occurs in the Paṭṭiṇappālai (l. 299) of Kaṭiyalūr Uruttiraṅkaṇṇaṇār who was the recipient of 16,00,000 gold pieces at the hands of Karikāla (ll. 19-21). This internal evidence establishes beyond doubt the contemporaneity of the poet and the king,

1 ll. 130-48.

2 Akam., st. 246; of Maṇi., canto iv, ll. 107-8.

3 Paṭṭiṇappālai, ll. 283-4.

4 J. Burgess and Natesa Sastri, Tam. and Sans. Ins., No. 29. pp. 204-24. See also Anc. Ind., p. 349.

5 Cantos v, ll. 90-104; vj, ll. 159-60; xxi, l. 11 ff.

a chief plank in determining the date of Karikāla. The second reference gives him the full name of Karikālvalavan by which term the Puranānūru 66 mentions him. In the third reference in the text referred to above, we have the story of Karikāla's daughter who, finding her husband, the ruler of Vañci, being washed away by the floods, plunged courageously into the waters and rescued him by the power of her chasity. It is unfortunate that we have no more details about this incident, not even the names of that daughter and her husband.

An instance of his military prowess can be said to be the carving of the bow emblem on the Himalayas and the consequent overthrowing of the Arya monarchs of the north. This march was prompted by the fact of the intrusion of the northern kings into South India. As if to corroborate this statement the Cilappatikāram elsewhere evidences the fact that Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was an ally of Avanti (Ujjain in Mālva), and of the kings of Vajra and Magadha. We have records, literary and epigraphical, which testify to such invasions during the epoch of the Nandas and the Mauryas. There was a reaction. Powerful southern kings like Karikāla, Imayavarampaṇ Neṭuñ-cēralātaṇ and Ceṅkuṭṭuvan led expeditions to the north and their unqualified victories stemmed the tide of political invasions from the north for the time being; for we know Samudragupta carried his victorious arms to the very south. The extant commentaries on the epic regard Karikāla as the contemporary of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan, the hero of the Vañjikkāṇṭam of the epic. The commentators say that the Cōla king under reference in the Pukār-kāṇṭam and even later was Karikālaccōlaṇ.¹ But this militates against the indications furnished by the text of the Cilappatikāram. That a certain king by name Karikāla lived, and that he was an ancient monarch is testified to us by the anthologies of the Puṛaṇānūru and the Akaṇānūru, besides other Caṅkam works. Here are celebrated the achievements of the Cōla Karikāla, and if we compare these achievements with those referred to in the Cilappatikāram, it is just possible that the Cōla under reference is no other than Karikāla.

¹ Arumpatavurai, canto iii, l. II; also gloss of Aṭiyārk-kunallar on cantos i, ll. 65-8, v, l. 212, and vi, l. 15.

In describing the two achievements of Karikāla—the march to the Himalayas, and the festival of bathing in the first freshes¹ of the Kāveri, the poet refers to them as past incidents by the significant expression annāl, making us infer that Karikāla lived a little before the epic was composed, and not very far removed from the date of its composition. The next question arises as to who this Karikāla was, and what was his relationship to Ceraṇ Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ. In the patikam, the prologue to the poem, Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ's mother is said to be a daughter of the Cōla king, and her name was Nacōṇai. According to the Patirruppattu (the fourth Ten) there was one Cōla Maṇakkiḷi. His daughter must be the mother of Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ and her name was Nacōṇai. Maṇakkiḷi in his turn must have been the son of Karikāla. In the light of this relationship, Karikāla must have been the maternal great-grandfather of Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ and not his grandfather as some scholars would have it. If the latter relationship can be accepted, Maṇakkiḷi would stand by himself, and it would be difficult to find for him a proper place in the genealogical list. Hence it stands to reason that Karikāla must have lived a generation before the age of Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ, and could not therefore have been his contemporary.²

1 Canto vi, ll. 159-60.

2 Prof. K. A. Nilakanta Sāstri in his learned study of Karikāla accepts that the figure of Karikāla is to start with Incidentally, we may remark that the Karikāla of the Cilappatikāram or of the Caṅkam works has nothing to do with the Karikāla represented to be a contemporary of Trilōcana Pallava and Cāṅkya Vijayāditya of the early fifth century A.D.¹ It is still a moot question who this Trilōcana was and when he lived.² Even if his date and identity were established, and there is no reliable testimony to establish it, there is nothing to prevent another Karikāla having flourished in Pukār a few centuries later. If the reference in the *Akanāṇūru*³ has any significance at all, it shows, as has already been said, the contemporaneity of Iṃayavarampaṇ Neṭuñcēralātaṇ and Karikāla. Though we cannot definitely mark out the chronological limits of Karikāla's career, it is reasonable to assume that he lived at the commencement of the second century A. D. It seems to be certain that at the accession of Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ to the Cēra throne (circa A. D. 140) Karikāla was dead, and Maṇakkiḷi was reigning. For, according to the account preserved in the Cilappatikāram, Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ had to interfere in the disputed election to the throne of the Cōlas,⁴ and it needs no stretch of the imagination to deduce that this was the consequence of the death of Maṇakkiḷi's son. The conclusion is irresistible that the duration of the reigns of Karikāla and Maṇakkiḷi was comparatively thoroughly realistic and historical, and indicates his view that Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ came at least half a century after Karikāla, if not earlier. (Studies in Cōla History and Administration, pp. 37-49-50.)

1 Contra P. T. Srinivasa Iyengar, History of the Tamils, pp. 382-7; Dr. N. V. Ramanayya, Trilōcana Pallava.

2 For Kṛṣṇa Sastri's opinion, see, Ep. Ind, Vol. X, p. 58, n; 2.

3 St. 55.

4 Canto xxvii, ll. 118-23.

short. According to the evidence cited by the Uraiperu-katturai it was Perumkiḷḷi or Perunarkiḷḷi that succeeded Maṇackiḷḷi, or probably his son Neḍumkiḷḷi, and was reigning at Uraiyūr at the time of the consecration of the Pattinī temple.

From this foregoing evidence the following genealogical list of the early Cōlas of the first and second centuries A. D. can be drawn.

VIII

THE POLITICAL CONDITION OF NORTH INDIA

The Cilappatikāram also gives an insight into the political condition of North India in the first three centuries of the Christian era. This was the dark period of Indian History so far as North India was concerned. But the recent researches of Dr. K. P. Jayaswal in his History of India A. D. 150-350, have shed much light and lifted up the veil of gloom. It was only under the Guptas that North India regained its old position of prestige and pre-eminence. During that period, which extended for more than two centuries, there was no towering personality of prowess and valour to meet a strong foe like Ceṅkuṭṭuvan, The whole region was divided into a number of petty principalities over each of which was a chieftain. It is said that there were as many as one thousand chieftains whom Ceṅkuṭṭuvan had to encounter single-handed.¹ Though this number is an exaggeration, it demonstrates that there were a good number of small and independent states. Apparently, these different chiefs were enjoying autonomy. The principal kingdoms mentioned in the epic were Avanti, Vajra, Magadha and Mālva.² We know by their gifts of choice presents that the first three acknowledged the overlordship of Karikāla. The king of Mālva was an ally of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan. Some of them became jealous of the arms of the neighbouring monarchs. Hearing that a south Indian king like the powerful Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was advancing towards their kingdoms; some of the prominent minor rulers, Uttiran, Vicitiran, Uruttiran, Bairavan, Cittiran, Ciṅkan, Tanuttiran, and Sivetan, joined together under the common leadership Kanaka and Vijaya, and went to meet Ceṅkuṭṭuvan encamped far from the north of the Ganges.³ The scene of action mentioned is Kuyilāluvam.

The political situation in the north was quite favourable to the South Indian conqueror. The Āndhrās were in the position of allies. Kaniṣka, the other powerful king, was already dead. The smaller chieftains were not strong enough to offer a bold front to the strong arms of a conquering monarch like Ceṅkuṭṭuvan. The result was a crushing defeat for the northerners. Excepting those who had been slain and who had fled from the field of battle in fear and in different disguises, other important leaders were captured as prisoners of war, taken to the distant south as a mark of humiliation, and thrown into prison after being shown to Ceṅkuṭṭuvan's brother-monarchs, the Pāṇṭya and the Cōḷa.

1 Canto xxv, ll. 160-6

2 Canto v, ll. 99 ff.

3 Canto xxvi, ll. 180-6.

It would not be out of place to refer here to the Yavana-nāḍu and the Mālva region which find mention in the Cilappatikāram. According to the patikam of the second Ten of the Patirruppattu, Imayavarampaṇ put the Yavanas to disgrace by pouring ghee over their heads. The Yavanas are mentioned frequently in Tamil literature including the Cilappatikāram.¹ These were originally foreign traders with whom the Tamils had commercial transactions. But by the time of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan they had settled in India and, according to the Cilappatikāram, had their own flourishing and independent nāḍu, probably the Indus region.² They seem to have been very wealthy for diamonds formed part of the tribute paid by them. It appears that they acknowledged the overlordship of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan by paying tribute to him.

Mention is again made of the aid given by Nūrruvar-Kaṇṇar. The late Mr. Kanakasabhai identified them with the Śātakarṇi.³ According to the version in the epic these were apparently a class of people having their residence in the Ganges tracts. It is said that they helped Ceṅkuṭṭuvan with boats to cross the Ganges.⁴ The context does not warrant it to be the action of a particular individual but a group of persons. If the reference is to a certain Śātakarṇi⁵ it must be Śiva Śri Pulumāyi (A. D. 163-170),

1 Canto xxix, 'Ucalvāri st. 3; and canto xxviii, l. 141.

2 See in this connection V. A. Smith, The Early History of India. 4th ed., revised by S. M. Edwardes, 1924. pp. 462-3.

3 The Tamils 1800 Years Ago, p. 7.

4 Canto xxvi, l. 176.

5 According to Pandit M. Raghava Aiyangar, the king of Mālva is under reference especially from the fact that he was

In fact the neutrality or rather the alliance of the Andhrās was a preliminary condition for the success of the northern expedition of the Cēra monarch. That the Āndhrās conquered Magadha and established an All-India empire cannot be gainsaid. Light comes from an unexpected quarter which helps us to identify Bālakumāra and Vijaya. In this connection Ptolemy's reference to Baleokourous is of capital importance. Baleokourous is perhaps a corrupt form of Bālakumāra. Him Ptolemy refers to as a contemporary ruling prince about A. D. 160. From the fact the Bālakumāra belonged to a collateral line of the Āndhrās it can be inferred that he was an ally of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan. A certain Śatakarṇi was the imperial ruler at this time, He was perhaps Yajñaśri Śatakarṇi or Pulumāyi. According to the account of the Matsya Purāṇa, Yajñaśri was succeeded by Vijaya, a usurper. If we are to believe the epic account, this Vijaya was the son of Bālakumara. What is remarkable is the coincidence of dates, which fixes Ceṅkuṭṭuvan in the latter half of the second century A. D.¹

Before we close this section attention may be drawn to the futile attempt made by some scholars to identify Kanaka and Vijaya with Kaniška and Vijayakīrti of Khotan. According to Tibetan sources, shortly after A. D. 120, an expedition against India was undertaken by Kanika in connection with Vijayakīrti king of Khotan and the king of Guzan. This Kanika is identified with Kaniška; but as Prof. F. W. Thomas points out² this is in conflict with Tāranātha's statement. According to the present at the installation of the Pattinltēvi. (For a temple of Pattinī in E. Mālva, see T. G. Aravamudan, The Kāvēri, the Maukharis and the Sangam Age. pp. 41-2.)

1 See K. G. Seshā Iyer, I. H. Q., Vol. I.

2 Ind. Ant., Vol. XXXII, 1903, p. 349.

Professor, Kaniska lived in the Mauryan epoch. If on the other hand, Kaniska is identified with king Kanika, then Kanika 'must have started on his career from the Khotan country'. The evidence of the Kalpanāmaṇḍitīkā and of the Mahārājakanikalēkha points in the same direction. It is also to be noted that at the time of the expedition of Vijayakīrti to India, the ruling prince in Khotan was Vijayasimha. Last but not least is the tradition that Kaniska left India after his conquest and went back to Khotan. Excepting the accidental identity of the names Kanaka and Vijaya, other events connected with them have no bearing on the historical data furnished by the Cilappatikāram.¹ Vāsiṣka had succeeded² Kaniska in A. D. 152. If Chinese historical sources which mention the history of western countries down to A. D. 125 are to be believed, we have to take it that Kaniska rose to power after A. D. 125; for he is not mentioned in the Chinese books. It is impossible by any stretch of imagination for a Khotan prince to invade, conquer India up to the Ganges—for according to the Cilappatikāram the battle was fought on the banks of the Ganges—and to found an empire. It could not stop with this. Having firmly established himself, he heard of the distant Tamil kings and spoke slightly of their prowess. All this in the course of less than twenty-five years is an impossibility. Hence this identification cannot stand a critical examination.

IX

THE POLITICAL CONDITION OF SOUTH INDIA

From the foregoing account we have a rough estimate of the political condition of the Tamil land at the beginning of the Christian era. The three powerful kings were the Cēra, the Cōḷa, and the Pāṇṭya. The Pallavas of Kāñci were yet to come. Wars among these states were frequent. Often two kingdoms joined together against the third.

1 C. I. I., Vol. II, Pt. I, 1929, 'Kharōshthī Inscriptions', by Sten Konow, Intro., p. lxxv ff.

2 According to inscriptional evidence; ibid. p. lxxviii.

THE CĒRA KINGDOM

In the section on geographical data an attempt has been made to locate the nāṭus of the ancient Cēra kingdom. These were broadly classified into the malaināṭu and the kaṭalmalaināṭu. The malaināṭu (literally, mountainous country) was the Konkunāṭu, a part of which comprised the territory now occupied by the Salem and Coimbatore districts. Here was the famous capital city Vañcikkaruvūr. Here the Kollis and the Ānamalai range are the chief hills, and it may be remarked in passing that the Ānamalais are said to contain lofty peaks. The districts of Malayāḷa (the territory covering modern Malabar) were known as kaṭalmalaināṭu (region of seas and mountains). Here the chief divisions were Kuṭṭanāṭu,¹ Kuṭanāṭu and the Pūlināṭu. The term kuṭṭa means lowlands and apparently the reference is to the backwaters of the Malabar region. Probably it extended from Cranganore to modern Trivandrum. The Kuṭanāṭu covered the territory from opposite the Palghat gap to South Kanara and Coorg. The region of the Poraiyan, (literally, small hilly tracts), extended from Palghat to the Konkunāṭu proper.

The Cēra king was known generally as Kuṭavar-kōmān or the lord of the western region. His other titles were Kuṭṭuvan, Konkan, Pūliyan, Poraiyan, etc. This extensive Cēra kingdom, infested here and there by lofty hills, could not have been ruled directly by the central authority. If we analyse the available data, the inference forces itself on us that these different nāṭus were the various divisions of the empire, each division under the charge of a governor or viceroy who was appointed by and who owed allegiance to the Cēra king reigning at Vaṇcikkaruvūr. From the nature of the materials before us, it is not possible to say when these nāṭus were conquered and by whom. But at the time when the Cilappatikāram was composed, or even long before it, these nāṭus formed part and parcel of the Cēra kingdom. By extending their mighty empire, the Cēras occasionally earned the titles of Pukār-Celva and Imayavarampa. The Cēra state had international relations, or more appropriately inter-state relations, not only with its immediate neighbours, but also with distant rulers. The enemy kings were conquered, and often their states were annexed. Sometimes the defeated monarchs were reinstated under certain conditions. At the time of which we are speaking, the Cēra kingdom was the most powerful and the most wealthy of the Tamil kingdoms.

¹ Patirr., glossary, p. 168.

THE CŌLA KINGDOM

At the commencement of the story in the Cilappatikāram, the ruler of the Cōla kingdom was Kuṇavar-kōmān, and the kingdom had two capitals Uraiyūr and Pukār. The ruler of Uraiyūr was Maṇakkīḷi or more probably his son Neṭuṅkiḷi. According to the Maṇimēkalai, Māvaṅkiḷi or Kiḷiivaḷavan was the ruler of Pukār. His younger brother was Iḷaṅkiḷi (also Nalaṅkiḷi). There was a civil war between the Uraiyūr and Pukār Kiḷis. The most important battle was fought at Kāriyāru where Neṭuṅkiḷi was slain by Iḷaṅkiḷi. Neṭuṅkiḷi, it may be remembered, was the uncle of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan, and he had a son Peruṅkiḷi or Perunarkīḷi.

The succession was disputed, and Ceṅkuṭṭuvuan had to interfere. In this connexion he had to overthrow a confederacy of nine Cōlas, and ultimately he succeeded in enthroning his uncle's son Peruṅkiḷi. From this it is reasonable to assume that, besides the two capitals, there were other small semi-independent states within the Cōla kingdom where minor chieftains reigned, but all of whom acknowledged the overlordship of the Cōla at the capital. It is worthy of note that the Cōlamaṇṭalam extended as far as Kāñci, which belonged to Karikāla as provided by independent testimony.¹

The importance of Pukār was not long-lived. Anticipating the forthcoming devastation of the city, the Būta at the Būtacatukkam, which was brought from Indra's abode by Mucukunta, was removed to Vañci by the Cēra king². The destruction of Pukār by the erosion of the sea was effected during the period between the time when Maṇimēkalai left Pukār on a tour to Maṇipallavam and other places, and her return after nearly five years. This was probably in the year A. D. 170. Notwithstanding the ruin of the city, Pukār continued to be the capital, though diminished in importance. Once more Uraiṃyūr rose to prominence as the chief seat of the Cōla monarchs. At the time of the establishment of the Kaṇṇaki temple at Vañci, the Cōla ruler was Perunarkilḷi (also Peruṅkiḷi)³ who also had a temple built for her at Uraiṃyūr, his capital.

THE PĀṆṬYAN KINGDOM

Proceeding to speak about the Pāṇṭyan kingdom, Madura was flourishing as the capital of Āriyappaṭai-

1 Maṇi., canto xxviii, ll. 168-72.

2 Sila, Canto xxvili, ll. 147-8.

3 Uraiperukaṭṭurai, 1. 4.

katanta Neṭuñceliyan¹. It was a busy centre of trade and commerce and attracted even people like Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki. But the city was not to flourish long. Neṭuñceliyan ordered the unjust execution of the innocent Kōvalan and this cost the king's life and the destruction of the city. The ancient Pāṇṭyan kingdom had another capital at Korkai. From the Uraiperukaṭṭurai it is seen that at Korkai, was reigning Verrivērceliyan (also Iḷañceliyan) at the time when Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was in the north. Iḷañceliyan was the younger brother of Āriyappaṭaikatanta Neṭuñceliyan or simply Naṭuñceliyan. The latter was a man of letters,² and was a patron of literature. During his reign, Korkai was the seat of the Yuvarāja who was the king's own brother. The latter was crowned king while Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was absent in the north³. Finding his country suffering from a disastrous famine, he ordered the sacrifice of a thousand goldsmiths as an offering in honour of the Goddess of Chastity installed in his capital. He was also known as Verrivērceliyan.⁴ It is believed that after he became king he took the title of Nanmāran. Nanmāran had a son Neṭuñceliyan of Talaiyālankānam fame and a grandson of Ukkirapperuvaluti.⁵ This Peruvaluti with the attribute Kānappērtanta was a friend and contemporary of Perunarkilli (Rājasūyamvēṭṭa) and the Cēra Mārivenkō.⁶

1 Kaṭṭurai at the end of the 'Maturaikkāṇṭam'; also Āriyappaṭaikatanta Neṭuñceliyan.

2 See his verse in Puṇam., st. 183.

3 Canto xxvii, ll. 114-38.

4 ibid., ll. 127-34.

5 Puṇam., st. 76 ff.; Akam., st. 36. Cf. the Sinṇamanūr copper-plate.

6 Puṇam., st. 367 where the poetess Avvaiyār celebrates these three kings.

OTHER KINGDOMS

In the above outline of the political condition of South India mention has been made of the three chief Tamil kingdoms. But a study of the Caṅkam works, especially the Puṛaṇānūru and the Akaṇānūru, points to a number of petty kingdoms ruled by chieftains of minor importance besides these three major kingdoms. There is not enough material to deal in detail with these chiefs. But a reference has to be made to the Koṅkiḷaṅkōcar, or simply the Kōcar, whose country went by the name of Tuḷuṇāṭu;¹ and these Kōcar can be identified with the Satyaputras of the Acōkan inscriptions.² According to the testimony of literature, there was one Koṅkunāṭu which seems to have been comprised of the Cēra kingdom, the Tuḷuṇāṭu, and the country of Gangar and Kaṭṭiyar.

Our investigation would be incomplete if we did not mention other countries and peoples, mostly of South India, which were antagonistic to Ceṅkuttuvan. These are the Kaliṅkar, the Karuṇāṭar the Bangalar the Gangar, and the Kaṭṭiyar.³

The Kaliṅkar were the people of Kaliṅka, whose history can be traced back by independent testimony to the later Vedic and epic periods. It continued to be a powerful kingdom during the time of the Nandas and the Mauryas. We get a glimpse of the ancient history of Kaliṅka in the Cilappatikāram. There were two famous

1. Akam, st. 15.

2. See paper by V. R. R. Dikshitar on 'The Kōsar' read to the All-India Oriental Conference, Patna, 1930, also his article in Indian Culture, Vol. I, Pt. I., Calcutta, 1934; also in Pt. III, the contribution entitled 'Who were the Satyaputras?'.

3. Canto xxv, ll. 156-7.

cities, Cīṅkapura¹ and Kapilapura, ruled over respectively by Vasu and Kumara, of cognate relationship. Civil wars between them were common.²

The Karunāṭar, on the other hand, were the Kaṇṇaṭa people who are described as being hard-hearted and fierce. Karunāṭu means elevated country. Possibly the reference is to the people who occupied the plateau which was above sea-level. It may possibly refer to the region now occupied by the Mysore country.³ The Caṅkam literature knows again of a people called Vaṭukar who are also partly identified with the Kanareṣa people and partly with the Telugus. The term simply means 'people of the north' and hence must be the north of Tamiḷakam. Who the Bangalar were it is difficult to say; but it may be that they were the people of Bengal. We know from the Buddhist legends that there was intercourse by sea between Bengal and Ceylon at least from the fifth century B.C. when Vijaya is said to have landed here. It is reasonable to suppose that the route lay through the Coromandel coast. No doubt its effects were felt by the Tamil countries as well. The Gangar can be said to be the people of Gangavāṭi whose capital was Talakad. The Kaṭṭiyar are often mentioned in the Caṅkam works,⁴ and they seem to have occupied the territory lying to the south of the Vaṭukarpūmi. Apparently these were small chieftains who enjoyed independent rule. During the days of the 1 R. D. Bannerji relates a legend that led to the foundation of Cīṅkapura which became the capital of northern Kāliṅka. He is inclined to identify this city with the village of Singur in the Hooghly district of SW. Benga¹. History of Orissa, Vol. I, p. 49.

2 Canto xxiii, l. 138 ff. See also Maṇi., canto xxvi, l. 15 ff.

3 For the derivation of Karunāṭar see Mysore Gazetteer, Vol. I, pp. 254-7.

4 Akam., st. 44 and 226, and Kuruntokai, st. 11.

Vijayanagar empire their descendants were ruling over the territory now occupied by the Salem district.¹

CEYLON

The mention of Gajabāhu, the king of Ceylon, as having been present at the installation ceremony of the Goddess of Chastity is significant from more than one standpoint. It shows the frequent intercourse between Ceylon and South India. According to the Makāvamca the invasions by Tamil kings into the kingdom of Ceylon were pretty frequent, and were resented by the Ceylonese. We hear of an old woman complaining to Gajabāhu that among the 12,000 persons taken away by Karikāla for making an embankment on the Kāveri, was her only son. Notwithstanding this, the Ceylon king's relations with Ceṅkuṭṭuvan were cordial. As became an ally, he was present at the celebration of his victorious march to North India. 'South India and Ancient Ceylon' is a fascinating subject of study for a student of South Indian History, and it is hoped that a fuller treatment of the subject will be undertaken in the future.²

X

SOME FEATURES OF THE ADMINISTRATION

Long and laborious research in ancient Indian polity has tended to remove the misconception generally prevalent that all ancient Indian monarchies were autocracies. The consensus of opinion among scholars of the modern day is that the ancient Indian monarchs were not autocratic, but were subject to the laws of the land both customary and statutory. There were democratic institutions in the country which kept the king under control and prevented him from acting unduly on his own initiative. Such institutions were common both in North India and South India.¹

¹ See M. Raghava Aiyangar, Cēraṇ Ceṅkuṭṭuvan, pp. 112-3.

² An attempt has already been made by Mr. C. Rasanayagam in this direction in his book Ancient Jaffna, 1926.

But confining ourselves to South Indian polity we may make the statement that the king was benevolent and cared for the promotion of the welfare of his subjects. We know how the Cōla king Karikāla converted jungles into regions of fertility and wealth and how he undertook large irrigation schemes. There are stories told of his even-handed justice.² So was known the Pāṇṭyan Neṭuñceliyaṇ who gave up his life when he heard that he had meted out unjustifiable punishment to the innocent Kōvalaṇ. These instances are enough to prove that the king was no autocrat.

ASSEMBLIES

In the conduct of his administration the king was assisted by the assembly of five (aimperum-kuḷu) which consisted of the minister, the purōhita, the commander-in-chief, an ambassador and a spy, and by a group of eight officials (eṇpērāyam), the superintendent of the accounts, the head of the executive, the officer of the treasury, the chamberlain, the representatives of the citizens, the commander, the chief of the elephant-warriors and of the horse-warriors.³

1 For an elaborate study of these institutions see V. R. R. Dikshitar, Hindu Administrative Institutions, 1929.

2 Paḷamoli, st. 6; Maṇi., canto iv, ll. 107-8.

3 Cantos iii, l. 126; v, l. 157; xxvi, l. 38. Also Maṇi., canto i, l. 17.

The eṇpērāyam is also interpreted in a different way as eṇperumuṇaiyar (Tamil Lexicon, Vol. I, p. 520). These were professional people who catered for the needs of the royal household.

To illustrate; King Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was served by Villavankōtai, the commander of the land forces, and Aḷumbilvēl, the superintendent of income and expenditure. Saṅcaya and Nīla were the chief messengers. Saṅcaya was the head of the Kaṅcuka-mākkaḷ. The spies are described as wandering in different disguises in the capitals of the other kingdoms while the spies of other kings were going about in Vaṅci. The king consulted his officials before he undertook any business. That the queen attended such a council and had her say in the questions debated upon can be presumed from the fact that Ceṅkuṭṭuvan's queen Iṅkōvēṇmāḷ was present in the Council Chamber and took part in the discussion when the question of erecting the temple to Ptatiṇi Tēvi was decided.¹ The monotony of state business was often enlivened by dancing and music by the class of Cākkaiyar whose head was Kūttuḷpaṭuvōṇ.² The kingship was generally hereditary.³ and the king reigned according to the laws of the land. As has been pointed out already the theory of Marumakkattāyam as prevalent among the Cēras is not supported by the Cilappatikāram. On the other hand its evidence nullifies any such theory. The king knew the evil effects of tyrannical rule⁴ and hence endeavoured to do justice.

FLAGS, ETC

The three kings of the Tamil land had as their respective standards, the bow, the fish, and the tiger. They

We hear Mātari the cowherdess saying that she had to send ghee to the palace the next day (canto xvii, l. 7)

1 Cantos xxv, ll. 107-14; xxviii, l. 50.

2 Canto xxvi, l. 125.

3 Canto xxvii, l. 134.

4 Maṇi., canto vii, l. 12.

were further distinguished by garlands of palmyra, margosa, and atti leaves and flowers. We search the texts in vain for a national flag, for politically India was then divided into many nations each called after the name of their respective tribes.

CONDUCT TOWARDS PRINCES

Refractory sons were severely dealt with. The examples of Manuṇṭikaṇṭa Cōḷa, and Kiḷivaḷavan are furnished by the epic. When it was feared that some prince would stand in the way of the legitimate heir succeeding to the throne, the former took to a life of renunciation. Iḷaṅkō-Aṭikaḷ, the brother of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan, is a case in point.

INTERREGNUM

Sometimes it so happened that there was an interval between the decease of the reigning king and the appointment of his successor. This was what happened at the death of Neṭuṇṇēliyan by the curse of Kaṇṇaki. Then the council was in charge of the kingdom till Iḷaṇṇeliyan, the Imperial Viceroy at Korkai, was elected to the throne.¹

ROYAL AMUSEMENTS

Among the royal amusements were dancing and music by professionals. The king often retired to what may be called a pleasure resort, ilavantikaippaḷḷi. He was generally accompanied there by his queen. It is said that Ceṅkuṭṭuvan spent some time in that park in the company of his queen Iḷaṅkōvēṇmāḷ.²

1 Canto xxvii, ll, 132-8.

2 Cantos x, l. 31; xxv, l. 4.

RELEASE OF PRISONERS

Among the festivities of the state figured the king's birthday. It is called Perunā! (also Perumaṅkalam) when there was a general release of prisoners. Such general amnesty was also granted on other similar occasions. For example, on the occasion of the founding of the temple of Pattinī Tēvi, Ceṅkuṭṭuvan ordered the release of prisoners.¹

TULĀBĀRADĀNAM

The tulābāradānam was a redeeming feature of the royal festivities. It was a gift of gold to the deserving, generally a srōtriya, equal to the donor's weight. It figures as one of the sixteen mahādānas as prescribed by the Purāṇas like the Matsya and the Linga Purāṇas.² It is said the Ceṅkuṭṭuvan made this gift to the Brahman *Māṭalan*³ on the banks of the Ganges after he had had the stone intended for the image of Kaṇṇaki bathed in the sacred river.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

The department of finance was under the control of a body of officials who went by the name Kāvitimākka!. Perhaps the Kāviti was the chief finance minister who looked after the collection of revenues in the right season and in the proper way. He was one of the five officials whose advice was sought on questions of state finance by the king. His establishment went by the name āyak-kaṇakkar,⁴ which, it is said, announced a remission of taxes when the temple of Kaṇṇaki was founded.

1 Canto xxviii, ll. 204-5.

2 See V. R. R. Dikshitar, Matsya Purāṇa, 1935. p. 96.

3 Canto xxvii, ll. 175-6.

4 Canto xxviii, ll. 204-6.

COMMERCE, A SOURCE OF REVENUE

As a source of revenue commerce came only next to agriculture. There was active trade by land and sea. It is said that bales and cartloads were numbered and marked (kaṇṇeluttu). The merchants were the wealthiest community in the land and the king befriended them by honouring them with titles. *Eṭṭi*¹ was one such title.

TREASURE TROVE

We hear of an Eṭṭi Caṅkaman, a flourishing merchant at Madura.² Treasure trove was generally the property of the state, and tended to swell the royal exchequer. But so far as the Pāṇṭyan kingdom was concerned we hear that the Pāṇṭyan Neṭuñceliyan issued a proclamation to the effect that treasure and other legitimately acquired wealth belonged by right to the discoverer.³

This proclamation was the result of a representation made to the king by a poor young poet who was punished by the subordinate officials. Thus this was an exception and not the rule. The presents of the hillmen (like those at the Nilgiris) to *Ceṅkuṭṭuvan*⁴ and the tributes by subjugated monarchs were other sources of revenue, though the income from these items could not have been much.

The chief item of expenditure was connected with the civil and the military establishments of the state. An idea of the military expenditure will be apparent from the number of the fourfold army and commissariat which followed Ceṅkuṭṭuvan on his northern expedition.⁵

1 Canto xv, l. 163.

2 Canto xv, l. 196.

3 Canto xxiii, ll. 128-9.

4 Canto xxv, ll. 35-55.

5 Canto xxvi, ll. 128-40. See also M. Raghava Aiyangar, op. cit., p. 134.

Chariots	100
Elephants	500
Horses	10,000
Carts and carriages	20,000
Kaṇṇukar	1,000
Dancing-girls	102
Musicians	208
Jesters	100

WARFARE

We have seen that the army of the ancient Tamils consisted of a fourfold classification of chariots, elephants, cavalry and infantry. The chief defence was by means of well furnished fortifications. The battlements and ramparts were mechanically provided with efficient mechanisms containing curious devices in the shape of monkeys, kingfishers, sows, vultures, serpents, horses and swans.¹

Before the king left his capital he entertained his soldiers with a grand feast and sent his sword and umbrella on the state elephant in advance, on an auspicious day. After having prayed to the gods in the temples of his city and in the Yajñasālas the king actually left his town. This was what Ceṇkuṭṭuvan did on the eve of his northern expedition.² Such of the heroes as showed a bold front to the end and died, were honoured with Virakkal or Naṭukal, monuments raised in commemoration of their deeds of valour of which a good number are even now brought out by the spade of the archaeologist. Before the actual operations, an ultimatum was generally sent to the enemy king to the effect that those who did not

1 Canto xv. ll. 206-16.

2 Canto xxvi, ll. 52-66.

voluntarily surrender would have to submit to the horrors of war.¹

A number of musical instruments were displayed on the field of battle. These were koṭumparai, neṭuvayir, muracam, pāṇṇil, etc. The kings who still opposed him in open war were taken prisoners after their defeat and released on their submission. The wars were so fierce that the soldiers sometimes cast off their arms and escaped in the guise of ascetics, musicians and dancers, Brahmans and other non-combatants.² This points to the prevalence of ethical standards in ancient warfare in South India.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Passing on to the department of justice we notice that the chief magistrates who sat in the hall of justice (Aṛakkaḷam) when they disposed of cases were Brahmans. The idea was that those dispensing justice must be versed in the law codes.³

Though the kings were actuated by the best of motives in meting out justice there was sometimes a miscarriage as we note in the case of Kōvalan.⁴ There were jails and superintendents of jails.⁵ As already noticed there was a periodical release of prisoners. Usually capital punishment was awarded in cases of theft. Among others the six chief offenders according to the laws of the state were false witnesses, pseudo-sannyāsins, unchaste women, disloyal ministers, adulterers, and tale bearers.⁶

1 Canto xxv, ll. 183-94.

2 Canto xxvii, l. 179 ff.

3 Canto xxii, l. 8; xxvi, l. 246; xxviii, l. 222.

4 Canto xvi, l. 148. ff.

5 Canto xxiii, l. 103. Maṇi., canto xix, l. 133.

6 Canto v, ll. 128-34.

VILLAGE ADMINISTRATION

Already we have seen that the empire was divided into nāṭus (perhaps answering to modern provinces) and a subdivision of the nāṭu was the kūrram (district). But the village was the unit of administration.

Every village had a maṇṇam or the village sabhā, where the elders transacted the business of the village. There were certain tribal settlements in the hills and forests. The Eiyṇar settlement may be cited as an example. Excepting these settlements, the villages in general were not isolated groups far away from the link of humanity. There was active intercourse, political and commercial, between village and village and between village and city. Learned men and pious Brahmans of one kingdom felt at home in alien kingdoms. To cite an instance, the Brahman of Māṅkāṭu, a village in the Cēra nāṭu, visited sacred places as far as Cape Comorin through the Cōḷa and Pāṇṭya kingdoms. In spite of the gloomy trail through woods and jungles the roads were safe. There were officials appointed by the state to look after the welfare of the village, and these were to a large extent responsible for the peace and security of the rural parts. They were often aided by the village assembly.

XI

GEOGRAPHICAL DATA

The celebrated commentator Naccinārkkinīyar divides the whole Tamil land into four divisions: Malaimaṇṭalam, Chōḷamaṇṭalam, Pāṇṭyamaṇṭalam, and Toṇṭaimaṇṭalam. In the days of the Cilappatikāram there was no Toṇṭaimaṇṭalam division as such. There were then only three divisions. Malaimaṇṭalam was already referred to as the Cēra kingdom. It may be noted in passing that of this territory, the Pāṇṭyan king Neṭuñceliyan added by conquest Miḷalaikkūrram¹ and the Muttūrkkūrram² from the Cōlas, apparently territories in the modern district of Tanjore,³ and Kuṇṭūrkkūrram⁴ from the Cēras. It is only the gloss that gives this indication, and we have no other testimony to confirm it.⁵

If we are to follow the traditional account of three Caṅkams, and there is no reason why we should not, the ancient capital of the Pāṇṭyan kingdom was also swallowed up by the sea, and this necessitated the moving of the capital to Korkai, probably the Kavāṭapuram of Sanskrit

1 It is rather difficult to identify this, though South Indian inscriptions often mention this as part of Pāṇṭināṭu. For instance a record in the fourteenth year of the Pāṇṭyan king Jaṭavarman Sundara Pāṇṭya of the thirteenth century A.D. refers to it. (See also Tamil record No. 67 of 1910.) Tamil records Nos 460-1 of 1909 refer to two places, Kīlkūrru and Kaḷakūrru as subdivisions of Miḷalaikkūrram. Naṭuvīrkūrru is another subdivision according to Tamil records, 130 of 1908 and 425 of 1911.

2 This is also referred to in a number of inscriptions. Tamil record No. 59 of 1909, dated in the thirteenth year of the Pāṇṭyan King Jaṭavarman mentions Muttūrkkūrram in Pāṇṭyamaṇṭalam. See also 441 of 1904, 86 of 1905 and 80 and 266 of 1907. In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries Kappalūr seems to have been an important place in this subdivision (see Nos. 425 and 429 of 1913).

3 K. A. Nilakanta Sastri, The Pāṇṭyan Kingdom, p. 28.

4 This can be identified with Kuṇṭūrkkūrram occurring in the Maḍura inscription of a Pāṇṭyan king whose name is lost. According to this, Kuṇṭūr was the capital of Kuṇṭūrkkūrram, and this kūrram formed a part of Aṇṭanāṭu (see I.M.P., Vol. II, p. 1036, ed. by V. Rangachary). According to a record of Trichinopoly district, 460 of 1908, it came to be known later as Rājanārāyaṇa-Caturvētimankalam.

5 p. 303.

literature. From this again the capital was transferred to the modern city of Madura, and this had been effected by the time of Pliny as he refers to it.¹ This became the seat of the great and ancient academy well known as the Caṅkam. Korkai also continued to be a chief city under the charge of the crown prince. The chief hill in the kingdom was Potiyil, the residence of the sage Agastya if we are to believe the traditional account, and the important river was the Vaikai which was crossed when in flood by boats and canoes.

The limits of the ancient Pāṇṭyan kingdom may roughly be stated to have comprised the modern districts of Madura, Ramnad and Tinnevely. The Vellār flowing through the Pudukkottai State formed its northern boundary. The Cōḷa kingdom consisted of a part of the modern Trichinopoly district, as well as Tanjore, Chingleput and South Arcot districts. The Toṇṭaimaṇṭalam which rose to prominence under the Pallavas was an appendage to the old Cōḷamaṇṭalam. It was in its turn divided into a number of nāṭus and kūrrams. Like the Pāṇṭyan kingdom the Cōḷamaṇṭalam had two capital cities Uraiyūr (Sans., Uragapuram) in the Trichinopoly district and Kāvērippaṭṭiṇam in the Tanjore district. The latter achieved prominence under Karikāḷaccōḷan, the son of Iḷamcēṭcenni, but a part of it was destroyed by the sea in the course of two generations. It consequently lost its ancient glory as the principal seat of government.²

According to the Periplus the capital city Uraiyūr was the chief mart for pearls and the well-known Argynitic

1 E. H. Warmington, The Commerce between the Roman Empire and India, 1928, p. 167.

2 For a detailed description of the city, its fortifications, streets and roads, see cantos V and VI.

the term maṇṭalam in the sense of a province or kingdom does not occur in the Caṅkam works.

The ancient Cēranāṭu was constituted by modern Salem, Coimbatore, and the Nilgiri districts besides the whole of Malabar and a part of Travancore (Vēlnāṭu). This kingdom occupied five of the twelve divisions which comprised all the Tamiḷakam. The five of the Cēramaṇṭalam were Kuṭṭanāṭu, Kuṭanāṭu, Koṅkunāṭu, Pūlināṭu and Malāṭu (Malaināṭu). Some of the titles of the Cēras like Kuṭṭuvan and Pūliyan are coined from the names of these territorial divisions. The ancient Koṅkunāṭu comprised the modern districts of Salem and Coimbatore. The chief rivers of the Cēra kingdom were Ānporunai (Amarāvati), Kuṭavanāru, Kāñci (Noyyil), Kāriyāru, Cuḷliyāru,¹ Pēriyāru or Ponnāni, and Bavāni or Vāni. To this kingdom Ceṅkuṭṭuvan added by conquest Koṭukūr in the south of the Mysore state. Vañcikkaruvūr² was the capital of this great kingdom. Toṇṭi and Muciri were the chief ports.

We are furnished with a full and detailed description of the capital city, its suburbs, fortifications, streets and roads, public halls, museums, parks, temples and maṭams and the palace.³

The late Kanakasabhai surmised that this Vañci might be Tiru-karūr now a deserted village three miles from Kothaimangalam and this view has been adopted by some of the later scholars without bestowing much thought on this all-important question. This theory did not go unchallenged. Pandit M. Raghava Aiyangar first identified Vañci with Karuvūr in Tiruchirrapalli district. Following him Mahāvīdvān R. Raghava Aiyangar, whose authority on the Caṅkam classics cannot be disputed, wrote a book in Tamil entitled Vaṅcimānakar. The long and short of this erudite thesis was to settle once for all the controversy as to the location of the original Cēra capital, and after a critical examination of all the aspects of the question, he came to the only possible conclusion that this Vaṅcikkaru-vūr was the present town Karūr in Trichinopoly district. It is not possible nor is it necessary to traverse the ground again. If epigraphy were pressed into service, the following would be read with interest: 'A damaged record in the Cīvā temple here (Nerūr, a village very near Karūr) mentions Karuvūr as Vaṅcimānakaram which must help to settle the identification of the original Vaṅci at Karūr and not at Cranganore on the west coast.'¹

1 Suḷli falls into the western sea; at its mouth is the town Muciri.

2 Cantos xxvi, l. 50; xxviii, l. 196.

3 Maṇi., canto xxviii; Sila., canto xxviii, ll. 48-50.

The chief mountains are the Kolli hills, the Ayirai hills (in which the Ayirai river has its source), and the chain of Ānamalais. This river Ayirai² must be Ponnāni (Pūrṇavakini). The hill Ayirai (Aivar-Malai) was sacred to the goddess Korravai, the deity of the Cēras. The other hills of the Konkunātu are Nanrā and Vaṇṭamalai, the latter south of Karuvūr,

THE PĀṆṬYAN KINGDOM

It would appear that the ancient Pāṇṭyan kingdom extended far into the south where were the Kumari hill and the river Pahruḷi both of which had been swallowed up by the sea long before the commencement of the Christian era.³ As if to compensate for the loss of this territory, the Pāṇṭyan king Neṭuñceḷiyan added by conquest Miḷalaikkūṛram¹ and the Muttūrkūṛram² from the Cōḷas, apparently territories in the modern district of Tanjore,³ and Kuṇṭūrkūṛram⁴ from the Cēras. It is only the gloss that gives this indication, and we have no other testimony to confirm it.⁵

¹ Gazetteer of the Trichinopoly District, Vol. II, 1931, p. 130.

² Canto xxviii, ll. 145-6.

³ Canto xi, ll. 17-22; see commentary on canto viii, ll. 1-2.

If we are to follow the traditional account of three Caṅkams, and there is no reason why we should not, the ancient capital of the Pāṇṭyan kingdom was also swallowed up by the sea, and this necessitated the moving of the capital to Korkai, probably the Kavāṭapuram of Sanskrit

1 It is rather difficult to identify this, though South Indian inscriptions often mention this as part of Pāṇṭināṭu. For instance a record in the fourteenth year of the Pāṇṭyan king Jaṭavarman Sundara Pāṇṭya of the thirteenth century A.D. refers to it. (See also Tamil record No. 67 of 1910.) Tamil records Nos 460-1 of 1909 refer to two places, Kīlkūṛru and Kaḷakūṛru as subdivisions of Miḷalaikkūṛram. Naṭuvīrkūṛru is another subdivision according to Tamil records, 130 of 1908 and 425 of 1911.

2 This is also referred to in a number of inscriptions. Tamil record No. 59 of 1909, dated in the thirteenth year of the Pāṇṭyan King Jaṭavarman mentions Muttūrkūṛram in Pāṇṭyamaṇṭalam. See also 441 of 1904, 86 of 1905 and 80 and 266 of 1907. In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries Kappalūr seems to have been an important place in this subdivision (see Nos. 425 and 429 of 1913).

3 K. A. Nilakanta Sastri, The Pāṇṭyan Kingdom, p. 28.

4 This can be identified with Kuṇṭūrkūṛram occurring in the Madura inscription of a Pāṇṭyan king whose name is lost. According to this, Kuṇṭūr was the capital of Kuṇṭūrkūṛram, and this kūṛram formed a part of Aṇṭanāṭu (see I.M.P., Vol. II, p. 1036, ed. by V. Rangachary). According to a record of Trichinopoly district, 460 of 1908, it came to be known later as Rājanārāyaṇa-Caturvētimankalam.

literature. From this again the capital was transferred to the modern city of Madura, and this had been effected by the time of Pliny as he refers to it.¹ This became the seat of the great and ancient academy well known as the Caṅkam. Koṅkai also continued to be a chief city under the charge of the crown prince. The chief hill in the kingdom was Potiyil, the residence of the sage Agastya if we are to believe the traditional account, and the important river was the Vaikai which was crossed when in flood by boats and canoes.

The limits of the ancient Pāṇṭyan kingdom may roughly be stated to have comprised the modern districts of Madura, Ramnad and Tinnevely. The Veḷḷār flowing through the Pudukkottai State formed its northern boundary. The Cōḷa kingdom consisted of a part of the modern Trichinopoly district, as well as Tanjore, Chingleput and South Arcot districts. The Toṇṭaimaṇṭalam which rose to prominence under the Pallavas was an appendage to the old Cōḷamaṇṭalam. It was in its turn divided into a number of nāṭus and kūrrams. Like the Pāṇṭyan kingdom the Cōḷamaṇṭalam had two capital cities Uraiyūr (Sans., Uragapuram) in the Trichinopoly district and Kāvērīppaṭṭinam in the Tanjore district. The latter achieved prominence under Karikalaccōḷan, the son of Iḷamcēṭcenni, but a part of it was destroyed by the sea in the course of two generations. It consequently lost its ancient glory as the principal seat of government.²

According to the Periplus the capital city Uraiyūr was the chief mart for pearls and the well-known Argynitic

1 E. H. Warmington, The Commerce between the Roman Empire and India, 1928, p. 167.

2 For a detailed description of the city, its fortifications, streets and roads, see cantos v and vi.

muslins; Argynitic being an adjective derived from the name Uragapuram. Sixty years later Ptolemy states that Uṛaiyūr was the capital. The Kāvēri was the only important river of the Cōḷa country.

To conclude, 'the traditional meeting-place of the three Tamil kingdoms was the temple of Cellāṇṭi Amman on the banks of the Kāvēri, twelve miles west of Kuṇṭitalai and three miles below the junction of the Amarāvati and the Kāvēri. The temple was the common place of worship of the kings of the three Tamil dynasties; a bund which runs to the south of the river marks the boundary between the Cōḷa and the Pāṇṭya territories, and the Karaipōttanār on the opposite bank of the river was the boundary between the Cōḷa and the Cēra kingdoms.'¹

XII

RELIGIOUS DATA

Man is a religious animal and invokes the assistance of superhuman beings in his weal and woe. This invocation comprises rituals of fasting and feasting, singing and dancing. These are believed to please the deity who in his turn is expected to shower blessings on his worshippers. The chief gods invoked by the ancient Tamils were Sēyōṇ (also Murukan and Vēlan) and Māyōṇ (Kṛiṣṇa or the Black God). Other gods worshipped were Cīvā, Korṛavai or the Goddess of Victory, Balarāma, Varuna, Indra, etc. There is a view that some of these were peculiar to the different regions (of which five are distinguished) in the Tamil land.² But these are also Vēdic and Purāṇic gods, and their mention in early Tamil poetry shows that the assimilation and the blend of the two cultures, Sanskrit and Tamil, was a thing of the ancient past. The earliest extant work in Tamil, the Tolkāppiyam bears evidence of this. Similar ideas are found scattered in the Cilappatikāram, and the twin epics betray clear influence of the Buddha and the Jaina cults which had come to stay in the Tamil land.

1 Gazetteer of the Trichinopoly District, Vol. II, 1931, p. 67.

2 See History of the Tamils, p. 75 ff.

Side by side with these dissenting sects of which three are mentioned—the Buddha, the Jaina and the Ājīvaka, the established religion of the land was in a flourishing condition. At the outset, it must be remarked that there was no nice distinction between the orthodox religion and the so-called religion of the dissenting sects. The fundamental principle of all these sects were the same, and the differences, if any, were minor and trivial. It was in philosophical outlook and speculation that there was any difference, and hence the masses of the people to whom the higher philosophy was a sealed book did not trouble themselves about it. The religious discussions were only among the cultured few, and differences in opinions and views among them were treated with mutual respect. By the orthodox religion we mean Caivism and Vaiṣṇavism. Even here the bitter hatred of the Caivā and Vaiṣṇavā cults as separate sects, which was only a later growth on the tree of Indian religion, is totally absent in the Cilappatikāram. It is not possible to say whether in the days of the epic a certain person was a Caivā or Vaiṣṇavā in his creed, and hence he cannot be marked exclusively a Caivā or exclusively a Vaiṣṇava. In fine, the sectarian spirit was totally absent, and every person was both a Caivā and a Vaiṣṇava. Mādari, a devotee of Kṛiṣṇa and hence a Vaiṣṇavā paid respects to Kavunti-Aṭigaḷ, a Jain sannyāsinī.

A classic example is Cēraṇ Centuṭṭuvan himself. Besides his prayers at the Agnihōtraśāla of his palace on the eve of his expedition to the north, the king went to the Civa temple and bore the feet of the Lord on his head as a mark of respect to Him. At this time the priests of the temple of Āṭakamāṭam, the local Vaiṣṇavā temple, gave him the prasādam (garland of flowers) which he wore on his shoulders. The commentator has identified Āṭakamāṭam with the Trivandrum Padmanābhasvāmī temple. But as Pandit R. Raghava Aiyangar has ably argued that once the thesis that Karūr was the capital of the Cēras is established, it could not be that priests came all the way from Trivandrum to Karūr, and that therefore we must look for the temple in or near Karūr.¹ Therefore this must be the Ranganātha temple in Karūr, while the Cīvā temple must have been the Pacupatikōil of that place.²

The epio also mentions the great shrines dedicated to Subrahmaṇya like Tiruccendūr, Tiruccengōḍe, Ērakam and Venkunru.³ The dances tuṭikkūttu and kuṭaikkūttu are attributed to Subrahmaṇya as the koṭukoṭṭi and the pāṇṭaraṇkam are to Cīvā.

The worship of the Dēvi as the Korravai or the Goddess of Victory and to Maṇimēkalai as the chief guardian deity of the sea is seen throughout. The idea that Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī and Pārvatī represent different aspects of the same Power is evident from the veṇpā in Canto xxii. This reminds us of the Lalitōpākhyāna portion of the Brahmāṇṭa Purāṇa where it is stated that the original goddess at Kāñci was Mahālakṣmī who came to be known in latter times as Kāmākṣhī. The ritual dance vēṭṭuvavari in honour of Korravai was often performed by hill tribes like the Maravar. The opening lines of Canto xii, in fact the whole canto, describe this dance, and in this connexion we find that among the pali (offerings) mentioned human and bloody sacrifices were not uncommon.¹ The Tēvi is often praised as the destroyer of Mahiṣāsura.

1 Vāṇcimānakaṛ; cf. canto xxvi, commentary on l. 62; T.A.S., Vol. V. p. 116.

2 Dikshitar also visited this ancient town and is inclined to confirm the learned paṇḍit's opinion.

3 Canto xxiv, p. 516

The ritual dance connected with Viṣṇu goes by the name of the kuravaikkūttu (probably Sans., Rāsakrīḍa). This kind of dance was largely performed by the female members of the community in honour of the god Kṛiṣṇa who, tradition affirms, married the cowherdess Pinnai in the same way that Murukaṇ married Vaḷḷi, a hill girl. When Kōvalaṇ was executed under the orders of the Pāṇṭyan king, the city was visited with a number of ill omens which indicated some disaster to the city and its residents. According to the belief of the times such things could be averted by invoking deities dear to them. Hence a kuravaikkūttu was arranged by Mātari and her daughter Aiyai in the presenee of Kaṇṇaki. Another kuravaikkūttu was performed by the women of the hill tribes on the Neṭuveḷkunram, the hill which Kaṇṇaki reached after the conflagration at Madura, and where, as she stood under the vēṅkai tree, a celestial car came down and took her to Heaven. In honour of Kaṇṇaki; these ladies arranged a dance and performed it with success.

Connected with the worship of Kṛiṣṇa was the worship of Balarama, his elder brother. That there was a cult of Balarama is obvious from the mention of a separate temple to him.¹ Prof. R. G. Bhandarkar is of opinion that the cult of Balarāma was known in Patañcali's time. It is not clear when the cult became extinct.² It is remarkable that the worship of Balarāma was in vogue in Tamil South India in the time of the Cilappatikāram.³

1 See in this connexion E. A. Payne, The Sāktas, introductory chapter.

Again, we find evidence in the Cilappatikāram of the existence of separate temples to the Sun God, the Moon God, the Kalpa Tree, the Airāvada, the Vajra, Cāttan, and other Pācaṇṭa gods.⁴ In the cities were found local shrines for the guardian deities. Such definite statements as to the existence of temples bear testimony to the fact that the institution of the temple had a much more ancient origin than that we would at present imagine. Evidence is not altogether lacking that temples existed in India in the fourth millenium B. C. as the recent finds of the Indus Valley indicate. Again, the four Pūtams named after the four castes and the Pūta at the Pūtacatukkam were also offered prayers. Among the Vēdic deities Indra, Varuṇa and Agni are invoked. In more than one place, there are references to Vēdic Brahmins, their fire-rites, and their chanting of the Vēdic

1 Canto ix, l, 10.

2 See his Saivism, Vaiṣṇavism, and minor religious systems, p. 13.

3 Dewan Bahadur K. S. Ramaswami Sastri drew my attention to a temple of Balarāma at Uḍabhanēṣvaram on the seashore at a short distance from Uḍupī, dedicated by Sri Madhavācārya, worship being conducted there down to the present time.

An image of Balarāma said to be a typical example of the Kushāna period, is one of the acquisitions noted in the An. Rep. of the U. P. Provincial Museum, Lucknow, for the year ending 1930.

4 Canto ix, ll. 9-15.

hymns. The Brahman received much respect from the king and was often given gifts of wealth and cattle. The purōhita (āśān) held a high status among the chief officials of the state, and he was a member of the cabinet which the king consulted on matters affecting the state. This is not unnatural as the Tamil kings claimed to be Kṣatriyas and the literary tradition connected them with the Solar and Lunar races.

Among the deities of the heretical sects, viz. the Pācāṭas, of whom the Tivākaram distinguishes as many as ninety-six sects, the Cāttan is prominently mentioned. Even now remains of these old Śāsta temples are found in the boundary limits of villages, and people in distress invoke their aid to tide over their difficulties. As now, in olden days the temples of these deities were frequently visited by distressed people and their wishes were granted. These Śāsta temples appear to be indigenous to South India, where they are largely found, especially in the Tamil districts. But in the age of the Cilappatikāram owing to the impact of Sanskrit culture the Śāsta cult was apparently treated as heretical in character.¹

We do not propose to deal fully with the three dissenting sects of Hinduism to which reference has already been made. There are references to the Buddha, the Intravikāra of Pukār, and the Mābōti,² but the references to Buddhism which can be gleaned from the epic are very few. This is probably because the other epic Maṇimē-

1 It is interesting to note in this connexion that Śāsta or Mahāśāsta is the son born of Civa when He embraced Mōkini (Viṣṇu in disguise), and hence he is called Hariharaputra. According to Aṭiyārkunallār and the Tivākaram another name for Cāttan is Cātavākanan.

2 Canto x, ll. 11-14.

kalai gives a full treatment of the subject. In the same way there are but few references to the Camana sect, the Ājīvaka, and to know what it is, one has to turn again to the pages of the Maṇimēkalai. It may be remarked in passing that all these sects were patronized by Aśoka, the Mauryan Emperor.

Some details about the Jaina practices and customs are also furnished by the Cilappatikāram. From a study of Canto xv one is tempted to conclude that Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki followed the Jain practice of bathing and clothing and eating. In fact they did so at Mātari's house. But the evidence of the Maṇimēkalai shows that they were Buddhists. As has already been said the distinctions between the orthodox religion and the other sects were not sharp. While Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was of the orthodox faith, his brother Iḷaṅkō-Aṭikaḷ is at least contended to have been a Jaina, and the poet Kūlavāṇikan Cāttaṇār, their common friend, was a Buddhist. This is not peculiar to South India. We know, for example, that members of Harṣha's family 'acted on their individual preferences in the matter of religion'. While Prabhākaravardhana, Harṣha's father, followed the worship of the Sun, his elder son Rājyavardhana was a Buddhist. Harṣha worshipped the Sun, Buddha and Cīvā. And yet there was no conflict of interests among them.¹

Again while the parents of Kōvalan were Buddhists, those of Kaṇṇaki embraced the Ājīvaka faith.² Thus different members of the same household followed different faiths and there was no sectarian spirit among them.

1 V. A. Smith, The Early History of India, 4th ed., revised by S. M. Edwardes, pp. 358-9. See also R. K. Mookerjee, Harsha (Rulers of India Series).

2 Canto xxvii, ll. 90-100.

Only two explanations can be offered for this. Either the people did not look upon religious distinctions seriously, or there were no fundamental differences between one sect and another. To every one of them, karma was a factor to be reckoned with. Man's actions bad or good are bound to yield results bad or good. Suffering in this birth may not necessarily be due to unrighteous acts done now but may be the result of past actions. Hence man must do his duty (svadharma) if he wants to attain salvation. The people in those days seem to have pinned their faith to this doctrine as many do even now.

Before we close this section it is worth noting that of all the Vedic gods, the worship of Indra is prominently mentioned. In fact the whole of Canto v of the epic is devoted to a detailed description of the festival of Indra and festivities connected with it. It would appear from the canto that the king interested himself in celebrating that festival with grand success, and to witness it, gods and men came even from remote parts of North India. It was an annual festival lasting for a number of days. It commenced on the full moon day in the month of Cittirai (April), and with the preliminary worship of the guardian deity who was sent by Indra to help an ancient king of the Pukār line, Mucukunta. Sacrifices were offered in the five different manrams of the city of Pukār.¹ One feature of the festival was the removal of the drum from the Vajrakkōṭṭam to the Airāvata temple, where it was placed on the nape of the elephant sacred to Indra. The bathing ceremony of Indra was the important day of the festival. We hear of the Indradhvajam festival in Sanskrit literature² which can be identified with the ceremony kalai gives a full treatment of the subject. In the same way there are but few references to the Camana sect, the Ājivaka, and to know what it is, one has to turn again to the pages of the Maṇimēkalai. It may be remarked in passing that all these sects were patronized by Aśoka, the Mauryan Emperor.

1 ll. 140-4.

2 E.g. Viramitrōdaya Rājanitiprakāśa, pp. 421-33.

Some details about the Jaina practices and customs are also furnished by the Cilappatikāram. From a study of Canto xv one is tempted to conclude that Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki followed the Jain practice of bathing and clothing and eating. In fact they did so at Mātari's house. But the evidence of the Maṇimēkalai shows that they were Buddhists. As has already been said the distinctions between the orthodox religion and the other sects were not sharp. While Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was of the orthodox faith, his brother Iḷaṅkō-Aṭikaḷ is at least contended to have been a Jaina, and the poet Kūlavāṇikan Cāttanār, their common friend, was a Buddhist. This is not peculiar to South India. We know, for example, that members of Harṣha's family 'acted on their individual preferences in the matter of religion'. While Prabhākaravardhana, Harṣha's father, followed the worship of the Sun, his elder son Rājyavardhana was a Buddhist. Harṣha worshipped the Sun, Buddha and Cīvā. And yet there was no conflict of interests among them.¹

Again while the parents of Kōvalan were Buddhists, those of Kaṇṇaki embraced the Ājivaka faith.² Thus different members of the same household followed different faiths and there was no sectarian spirit among them.

1 V. A. Smith, The Early History of India, 4th ed., revised by S. M. Edwardes, pp. 358-9. See also R. K. Mookerjee, Harsha (Rulers of India Series).

2 Canto xxvii, ll. 90-100.

Only two explanations can be offered for this. Either the people did not look upon religious distinctions seriously, or there were no fundamental differences between one sect and another. To every one of them, karma was a factor to be reckoned with. Man's actions bad or good are bound to yield results bad or good. Suffering in this birth may not necessarily be due to unrighteous acts done now but may be the result of past actions. Hence man must do his duty (svadharma) if he wants to attain salvation. The people in those days seem to have pinned their faith to this doctrine as many do even now.

Before we close this section it is worth noting that of all the Vedic gods, the worship of Indra is prominently mentioned. In fact the whole of Canto v of the epic is devoted to a detailed description of the festival of Indra and festivities connected with it. It would appear from the canto that the king interested himself in celebrating that festival with grand success, and to witness it, gods and men came even from remote parts of North India. It was an annual festival lasting for a number of days. It commenced on the full moon day in the month of Cittirai (April), and with the preliminary worship of the guardian deity who was sent by Indra to help an ancient king of the Pukār line, Mucukunta. Sacrifices were offered in the five different maṇṭrams of the city of Pukār.¹ One feature of the festival was the removal of the drum from the Vajrakkōṭṭam to the Airāvata temple, where it was placed on the nape of the elephant sacred to Indra. The bathing ceremony of Indra was the important day of the festival. We hear of the Indradhvajam festival in Sanskrit literature² which can be identified with the ceremony of talaikkōl in Tamil literature, but there was no actual celebration of Indra's festival. How the ancient Tamils took to this special form of Indra's worship still remains a puzzle.

1 ll. 140-4.

2 E.g. Viramitrōdaya Rājanītiprakāśa, pp. 421-33.

XIII

SOCIAL CONDITIONS : TOWNS AND TOWN LIFE

If the Maṇimēkalai can be characterized a philosophico-religious work, the Cilappatikāram can be said to be a treatise on political and social life.¹ Here we have a description of the three capitals with their glowing culture and civilization. In the busy streets of the cities any number of people belonging to various nations were met, most of them having come on commercial and other business. The municipal administration was excellent. The roads and streets were kept in good condition and were lighted. Committing nuisance in public streets was punishable. The houses seem to have been well built and properly provided with ventilation. Seven-storied buildings were not uncommon in the ancient cities, thus pointing to a considerable development of engineering skill in ancient South India. Among the communities the Brahmans received much respect especially for their learning in the sacred lore and for their continuance of the fire-rites. They were often awarded rich presents both in cash and kind. They were left unmolested during times of war, as was the case during Ceṅkuṭṭuvan's battle on the banks of the Ganges. Next came the merchant community, and being the wealthiest community its members were honoured with titles by the reigning chieftains of the land.

1 As Dikshitar has devoted a long chapter to this question in his book Studies in Tamil Literature and History only a baeer outline is given here, Life in towns was one of luxury and ease. Some of the amusements of the people were dumb-shows and dancing accompanied by music, both vocal and instrumental. Women freely participated in such amenities of life. They attended temples and took part in the public dances. They decked themselves with costly attire and ornaments and made themselves attractive. Their clothes were of cotton, wool, silk, and even rat's hair.¹ One mode of their decoration was the painting of their bodies with scented pastes and powders and the wearing of garlands of flowers.

The womenfolk in towns can be classified into two divisions: housewives attending to household duties and leading pure lives, and prostitutes who were public women living in special quarters where the voluptuous young men of the city thronged. Even married men resorted to these places and wasted all their wealth on these courtesans, caring little for their wedded wives. A typical example is Kōvalan who spent all his fortune on Mātavi the dancing-girl, as a result of which he became so poor that he had to go to Madura to earn a living. Outside the city in the suburbs, were public places which were the residences of ascetics and penance-performers, both orthodox and heterodox.

VILLAGES AND VILLAGE LIFE

If the town life was rich, the village life was equally so. The villagers, of whom the agriculturists, cowherds and shepherds formed the majority, led a simple life attending to their hereditary professions of cultivation and cattle-tending. The villages were not altogether cut off from the activities of town life. There were means of transport which were, primarily, bullock-carts on land and boats on water. Between the villages, or more properly between two great towns, thick forests abounded with wild animals and serpents, streams and springs of water, fruit trees and trees of other kinds, cornfields and flower gardens. Iḷanko-Aṭigaḷ gives us a vivid picture of all this when describing the route from ancient Pukār to Madura-¹

1 Canto xiv, ll. 205-7, comm.

The monotonous life of the villager was often enlivened by rural amusements of a varied character. Every village had a common dancing-hall (kaḷam).² Even the village women took part in these public performances like the tuṇaṅkai, a kind of dance.³ Having enough to eat and drink, the villagers led a contented and happy life. Notwithstanding the security and peace afforded by the kings of the land, theft was not uncommon. The Mara-var who lived in forests and desert tracts, otherwise known as the Eiynar, who were often employed as soldiers in wars by the Tamil kings, had for their chief profession highway robbery⁴. They often deprived the unwary wayfarer of his belongings: cattle lifting was one feature of their thieving. They were addicted to liquor and ate from a common table. They hunted the wild hog, boar and deer, whose flesh they ate, using their skins as clothes and their ivory teeth and nails as ornaments.

MARRIAGE

Another aspect of social life deserving notice is marriage. In the ancient Tamiḷakam two forms of marriage

1 Cantos x-xi.

2 Maṇi., canto iv, l. 6.

3 Canto v, l. 70.

4 See also Dikshitar's paper 'The Eiynar' in Sentamil, Vol. XXXI, No. 1.

were prevalent, the kaḷvau and the karpu (i.e. marriage in secrecy and marriage in the open). It was a peculiar custom of the kaḷavu that the lover secretly met the unmarried girl of his choice and made overtures of love to her. This roughly corresponds to the gandharva form of marriage. The lover usually came bearing a present in his hand as a token of his love. It was one of the divisions of the kaikkīlai form of love.¹ The whole of the canto 'Kāṇalvari' is a dissertation on the different stages of the kaḷavu form of marriage.² The karpiyal form which had already taken the place of the kaḷaviyal, from the epoch of the Tolkāppiyam if not earlier,³ had come to stay by the time of the epics. Though there are details of the kaḷavu form of marriage, it seems to have been confined to certain communities such as those living near the seaside or those living in the hills. In other words, the people in the lower stages of culture adopted it. In the more civilized parts of the land, the form of marriage was that laid down in the Dharmasāstras and the Grhyasūtras. The chanting of the Vedic mantras by the purōhita, the circumambulation of fire and similar customs show the profound influence which Sanskrit culture had on the Tamils. If the Tamils took to northern customs of marriage, the northerners who settled in the Tamil land also adopted some of the Tamil practices in their system of marriage. The tying of tāli (māṇkalyam) or a sacred thread to the neck of the bride by the bridegroom is an instance in point. There is no warrant in the ancient law-codes for this practice. It is a practice of the Tamils copied in later times by the so-called Aryans. This is another instance of the harmonious fusion of the two ancient cultures.¹

1 Tolk., 'Porul', sūtrams 104-6.

2 For further details see canto xxvi, 'Kunṇakkuravai'.

3 Tolk., 'Karpiyal', sūtra 4.

MUSIC AND DANCING

Passing on, we meet with a wealth of material for an elaborate study of music and dancing. There was ritual singing and ritual dancing. Dancing as a part of religious worship is in evidence among the ancient peoples. It is said² that 'in early Christianity bishops led the faithful in the sacred dances both in the churches and before the tombs of the martyrs'. We also hear that the Tarahumare Indians of Mexico regard the dance as 'a very serious and ceremonial matter, a kind of worship and incantation rather than amusement.'

A dance conducted with the intention of moving the deity becomes a real form of prayer and this is in evidence in the Tamil classic. In addition there were dumb-shows; but there is no evidence of any regular play having been enacted.

The Cilappatikāram furnishes the legendary origin of dancing. Once in the sabhā of Indra, his son Jayanta misbehaved with the heavenly actress Ūrvacī, in a manner that enraged the sage Agastya who cursed Jayanta to be born a bamboo stick in the Vindhya hills, and Ūrvacī a courtesan on the earth. Hence the name Jayanta is celebrated in the ceremony and worship of talaikkōl. It was a bamboo stick symbolical of Jayanta. Often the handle of the umbrella of an enemy-king was used as the talaikkōl.

1 The marriage of Kaṇṇaki and Kōvalan is a description of marriage in high life. See canto i for the preliminaries, the pantal, the religious and social functions ending with the āśirvāta rites.

2 E. Crawley, The Mystic Rose, Vol. 1, 1927, p. 371.

It was duly bathed and adorned and carried in procession before it was finally taken to the public theatre. The actress for the day placed it on her head perhaps to serve as an equipoise when regular dancing began.

The worship of Murukaṇ and Māyōṇ included dancing as a relieving feature of the occasion. The former is the war-god and the latter the love-god. But a number of dances are associated with gods like Śiva, Durgā, Indrāṇī, besides Murukaṇ and Kṛiṣṇa. Aṭiyārkunallār informs us that Kṛiṣṇa danced ten kinds of dances¹ (of which alliyakkūttu, mallāṭal, and kuṭakkūttu are mentioned in the text) after his victory over Kamsa, Bāṇāsura, and after the release of Aniruddha. Iṭankō-Aṭiḥaḷ refers to the dances of Śiva, Murukaṇ Kāma, Durgā, Lakṣhmī, and Indrāṇī. Śiva is said to have danced the koṭukoṭṭi and pāṇṭarankam dances after the burning of the Tripura (Three Cities) in the presence of Brahmā who was his charioteer at that time.² Murukaṇ is said to have danced the tuṭi after exposing the deceit of Śūrāsura; Kāma (the God of Love) the dance of Hermaphrodite; Durgā the dance of marakkāl after vanquishing the asuras; Lakṣhmī (the Goddess of Wealth) the dance of pāvai after her victory over the asuras; Indrāṇī the kaṭayam after defeating Bāṇāsura. But it is difficult to find similar references to these dances in Sanskrit literature. Of the eleven kinds of dancing,³ two divisions are distinguished: nilainṇrāṭal (a dance fixing oneself in a particular station); and pātam viṇṭāṭal. Six dances like the alliyam constitute the first division and five like the tuṭi the second division.

1 Canto vi, l, 46 ff.

2 ibid., l. 39 ff.

3 ibid., l. 65, comm.

In addition to these are the kuravaikkū tu so elaborately explained in the epic and performed by the women of the cowherd and other communities. It is said that Kṛṣṇa and Pinnai once engaged in that kind of dance. There was also the kūttu of the Maṇavar in honour of Korravai. The Cilappatikāram shows an advanced state of evolution in the art of dancing. From primitive ritual dancing, it became transformed into a mere form of secular amusement. This must have been due to the profound influence exerted by the classic works like the Bharatanāṭyasāstra. The term tēsikkūttu in the 'Arankērrukātai' will itself explain the indigenous as opposed to the alien forms of dancing introduced into the Tamil country. In explaining the technical terms the commentator quotes as authorities such authors as Ceyirriyanār, Mativāṇar, Baratacēnāpatiyār, Kuṇanūluṭaiyār, Jayantanūluṭaiyār.

From a study of relevant portions of our epic, the kūttus may be broadly classified into vēttiyaḷ and potuviyaḷ. Another classification was cāntikkūttu and vinōtak-kūttu.¹ Dancing was always to the accompaniment of music. The Cilappatikāram belongs to the class of icait-tamiḷ, in the sense that it has six cantos on music—'Arankērrukātai', 'Kāṇalvari', 'Vēṇirkātai', 'Āycciyar-kuravai', 'Kuṇṇakkuravai' and 'Vēṭṭuvavari'. Melody is fully realized as the basis of Hindu music. The structure of the musical modes or rāgas rests invariably on a system of seven notes. W. W. Hunter remarks: 'It is indeed impossible to adequately represent the Indian system by the European notation; and the full range of its effects can only be rendered by Indian instruments, a vast collection of sound producers, slowly elaborated

1 For details see Aṭiyārkkuṇallār's commentary, pp. 79-80.

during 2,000 years to suit the special requirements of Hindu Music.¹

South Indian music, usually called Karnāṭaka music seems to follow largely the theory, modes and notation of early Sanskrit musicians. But still in many respects it differs from them and maintains a distinct individuality unbroken for centuries together. Refinements were introduced from time to time in the original *rāgas*².

It would be an interesting study to examine the ancient theory of music, and its practice by means of musical instruments in use.³ But it is so technical in character that it is rather difficult to understand the full significance of the text in spite of elaborate commentaries on it. Isai is the technical term for music and singing, secular and religious, and may be vocal or instrumental or both. Suffice it here to say that the ancient Tamils like the ancient Greeks had a highly developed art of music.⁴ There were musicians of both sexes. The male singers were known as pāṇars and female singers as viralis and pāṇinis. They went from place to place displaying their musical talents and thus earning their livelihood. In addition to these professionals the ancient Tamils were lovers of music. Four varieties of tunes—paṇ, paṇṇiyar-riram, tiram, tirattiram—were developed, appropriate perhaps to each of the four regions into which the whole Tamil land was divided. The 'Arankērrukātai' (canto iii)

1 The Imperial Gazetteer of India, Vol. VI, 'India', p. 111.

2 See introduction to M. S. Ramaswami Aiyar's Svaramēḷa-kalānidhi.

3 For a collection of important extracts from the epic see M. Abraham Pandithar's Karunāmṛtasāgaram, 1917, pp. 526 ff.

4 For a short history of music, see W. J. Turner's Music in 'The How and Why Series'.

is a treatise by itself of the various aspects of musical science. Besides the text, the commentary throws welcome light without which it is not possible to make out anything of the ancient modes of Tamil music.

The qualifications of the songster, the drummer, the flutist, and the viṇā player are described in elaborate detail. The songster must possess the instinct to group and develop the notes by distinguishing the foreign from the indigenous.¹

He and his assistants like the drummer must be versed in nāṭaka literature which is divided into two parts, one relating to the king and the court, and the other relating to the common people. The drummer had to adjust his performance to that of the songster so that the latter might not feel the strain, nor the audience the monotony of the pure song. He supplied the deficiencies of the vocalist and the instrumentalist by appropriately swelling or reducing the sound of the drum. His skill much depended on the practice of his hand.² The flutist was a practised hand in what was known as cittirappuṇarppu which was nasalizing the hard consonants in singing a musical piece. He must be an expert in the use of his fingers.³

The viṇā player⁴ must be versed in fourteen pālais, four pertaining to the lower key, seven to the medium and three to the higher. In this way he adjusted the sound.

From a study of Canto iii in the Cilappatikāram three kinds of musical performance can be distinguished—

1 Canto iii, ll. 30-8.

2 ibid., ll. 45-55.

3 ibid., ll. 56-69.

4 idib., ll. 70-94.

the vīṇa, the flute and the vocal. The musician exhibited his skill either by playing on the vīṇa or flute, or by singing, but in all cases he was accompanied by the low-voiced mirutnkam and similar instruments. Four kinds of vīṇa are referred to by the commentator—pēriyāl, makarayāl, śakōṭayāl, senkōṭṭiyāl. The yāl was distinguished by the number of its strings. The flute was classified into five types according to the material of which it was made: bamboo, sandalwood, bronze, red catechu and ebony. Of these bamboo was the best, bronze middling while sandalwood and the others were inferior. The flute had seven holes for the seven svaras—sa, ri, ga, ma, pa, da, ni. Seven fingers were pressed into service when playing on the flute.¹ The seven fingers are three of the left hand leaving out the thumb and the small finger, and four of the right hand leaving out the thumb.

Of percussion instruments, which were generally hit with a stick and were accompaniments for any performance, thirty-one kinds were distinguished. All of them were made of stretched skins.²

A qualified actress went through seven years' training from her fifth year to her twelfth, and exhibited her skill on the public stage to win the appreciation and approval of the king.³

XIV

SUPERSTITIONS

The remark has been made already that the ancient Tamils were, like all ancient peoples, god-fearing, simple,

1 p. 101,

2 Studies in Tamil Literature, p. 799-n.

3 For the construction of the stage, ibid., 295-6.

superstitious, and almost ready to take things for granted. That they had a number of deities and that they sent their prayers to the gods in their daily life has been indicated in the foregoing pages. It was an age of crude astrology, and its aid was sought whenever any one fell ill and sickness persisted. This was especially so when girls were stricken with love-sickness. Little knowing that their unmarried daughters were under the frenzy of love, their parents treated them for one sickness or another. The final relief came, of course, only with the marriage of the girl. Side by side with this, the ancient Tamils attached much importance to dreams. There was the belief that a dream foreshadowed coming fortune or misfortune. It was believed that a dream, as they remembered it, would come true at some future time. Kaṇṇaki had an evil dream which she communicated to Tēvanti; and the Pāṇṭyan queen dreamt a horrid dream on the eve of the conflagration at Madura, of which she informed her husband, the king Neṭuñceḷiyaṇ.¹ There was in existence a treatise on dreams which foretold the results of dreams, good or bad. Aṭiyārkkunallār quotes from that book in his commentary.²

We may draw one or two references from the text to show how the ancient Tamils were superstitious. The nāṭkōḷ and the practice of parasthānam on an auspicious day on the eve of starting on distant expeditions or other parts of the country may be cited. The appearance of a hump-backed bull from an opposite direction when setting out on any business was supposed to lead to calamity.³ The following among others were supposed to spell disaster to the State: The falling down of the sceptre and the royal umbrella of their own accord; the appearance of Indra's bow (a rainbow) at night, and the falling of stars during the day-time, were regarded as omens¹ foretelling that some evil was in store for the ruling house and even for the kingdom. They had faith in gods and goddesses flying in the air to give aid to the distressed, such as the shipwrecked, and they also heard with faith the preachings of Cāraṇas, Yakṣas and other divinities whose feet did not of course touch the earth. Faith in the efficacy of mantras like the pañcāksara and aṣṭāksara was widespread. Belief in evil spirits who made a feast of dead and wounded bodies, and also frequented burial grounds, is attested to. The ancient Tamils had their own belief in expiatory ceremonies; for example, Kōvalaṇ helped in her prāyascittam (expiation) the Brahman lady who killed the mungoose. They took purificatory baths in sacred pools of water and give lavish gifts in cash and kind to the deserving, all of which, it was believed, would stand them in good stead in their lives after death. It is significant that there was a treatise on theft known as Karavaṭam, to which the state goldsmith referred in his argument with the executioners of Kōvalaṇ.²

1 Canto xx. ll. 1-12.

2 p. 408.

3 Canto xvi, ll. 100-101.

The existence of a high degree of excellence in the art of painting is clear from the reference to Ōviyanūl, to the different aspects and modes of painting, and the large use of it on walls of houses and on stage curtains. In this connexion the commentator furnishes notes from the Nāṭakanūl, Pañcabāratīyam and other works now lost to us. The carving out of Kaṇṇaki's image and the building of temples, paḷlis, and kōṭṭams also substantiate the view that sculpture and architecture were developed to the same high degree as the other fine arts, such as music and dancing. In fact, mention is made of all the sixty-four arts known to the Tamils.¹

1 Canto xx, l. 1 ff.

2 Canto xvi, l. 189.

XV

TRACES OF ARYAN CULTURE

The life described in the Cilappatikāram is generally permeated by Aryan concepts and Aryan religious ideas. This is also true of Cankam works like the Tolkāppiyam, the Narṛiṇai, the anthologies of the Akanāṇūru and the Puranāṇūru. It is evident that the Tamil imagination has been from early times influenced by Aryan culture. It can be safely asserted that in the Cankam age the original Tamil culture was transformed into a synthesis of Sanskrit and Tamil elements. The author of the Cilappatikāram must have had first-hand knowledge of the Sanskrit works on drama and music as well as of the Epics, and the Purāṇas. The following among the many may be cited as instances of Aryan influence in South India.

- (i) The opening lines of the first chapter are laudatory of Sūrya, Candra, Indra, and Varuṇa of the Vēdic literature.²
- (ii) In the first chapter again we find that the marriage rites of Kōvalaṇ and Kaṇṇaki were performed in the Aryan fashion with the help of a learned Brahman purōhita.³

1 Vātsyāyan's Kāmasūtra, Bk. I. § 3, st 14-5, comm.

2 For similar references see Tolk., 'Porul', sūtra 88; Kalittokai, st. 141.

3 Māmutupārppāṇ maraivaḷi kāṇṇiṭṭa tivalam ceyvatu, canto 3, ll. 52-8.

The bridegroom went around the fire as enjoined¹ by the Gr̥hyasūtras on Vaiśyas, and Kōvalan̄ was a Vaiśya. The fire-cult had been introduced into the Tamil country in much earlier times,² and the monarchs of old engaged in Vēdic Yajñas or sacrifices. Instances of this are not lacking. We have the Cōla Rājasūyamvēṭṭa Perunaṛ-kiṭṭi, the Cēra Celkelu-kuṭṭuvan̄, the Pāṇṭya Palyākaśālai-Mutukuṭṭumi.³

- (iii) There is again a reference to the region of Uttarakurus or the Bhōgabhūmi of Sanskrit literature in Canto ii of the epic and elsewhere, and the Patirruppattu speaks⁴ of Pālai-Kautaman̄ār going to Heaven in human form helped by his king Palyānaic-celkelu-kuṭṭuvan̄.
- (iv) The general description of dancing and music, the dance of Mātavi in particular before the Cōla king, and the very names Mātavi, Citrāpati, and Mātari lead us to infer that the author is indebted to Aryan ideas. Though the yāl is a characteristic Tamil instrument, the art and science of dancing reveal borrowings from an alien culture.
- (v) The reference to the sūta and the *māgadha*⁵ among the establishment of the royal

1 C. H. I., Vol. I, p. 233.

2 Tolk., 'Porul', sūtra 92.

3 Puṇam., st. 6 and 12.

4 See also third Ten.

5 Canto v, l. 48. For similar references see the Matu-aiikkānci, a composition of Mānkuṭi Marutaṇār whose contemhousehold may point to the introduction of another Aryan institution.

- (vi) The epic mentions deities like Siva, Baladēva, Subrahmany, Viṣṇu and Indra, and their worship, in more than one place.¹

To conclude, the dissemination of Aryan culture was largely brought about by that class of wandering mendicant whose business was to spread the light of knowledge from one part of the country to another. The exposition of the Purāṇa is spoken of as *tiṛavōruraikkumceyal*² and it was expounded by ascetics who made the outskirts of the city their residence.

From the foregoing discussion it can be noted that there is nothing in the Cilappatikāram which would mark it off from the cultural point of view as a poem belonging to an age different from that of the Puṛaṇāṇūru, Akanāṇūru, Eṭṭuttokai, Pattuppāṭṭu or even the Tolkāppiyam. If detailed references are lacking in these works it is due to the difference in the themes of each respective composition. If the Puṛaṇāṇūru and Akanāṇūru do not furnish us with religious data, it is because they were sung to earn the patronage of chieftains by eulogizing, sometimes unduly their achievements. There is however the Paripāṭal, where a poet like Nallantuvanār shows himself versed in Vēdic and Purāṇic lore.³

poraneity with Talaiyālāṅkānattup-pāṇṭyan is unmistakable. See Puṛam, st. 72.

1 Cantos v, ix and xiv.

2 Canto v, ll. 179-81.

3 E.g., the opening lines of poem 8; cf. also poem 3.

XVI

THE AUTHOR OF THE POEM

Ḫaṅkō was the younger son of king Cēralātaṇ, and his elder brother was the Cēra king Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ celebrated in the Cilappatikāram. The word Ḫaṅkō means the younger prince, and perhaps it was more a title than a proper name. But what his real name was we cannot say with any certainty. This young prince, who belonged to a distinguished family connected by marriage alliances with the other ruling dynasties of South India and who was blessed with fortune and wealth, was destined to give up the pleasures of royalty and to take to a life of renunciation and self-sacrifice. This came to pass as follows.

One day, when the king Cēralātaṇ was sitting in the audience hall, there came to the court an astrologer who predicted the immediate death of the reigning monarch and the passing of the throne to his younger son. It was an age of faith in astrology. The prediction was a rude shock to Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ, the elder son of the king and the heir-apparent to the throne. Ḫaṅkō noticed this, and in order that his brother might enjoy the honour attached to the throne, became a monk so that he could not be king.¹ The assumption of holy orders was to assure his brother that he would not stand to the way of his hopes and aspiration. As a monk should, he left his palace for the kōṭṭam (usually situated in a suburb); and his residence came to be called Kuṇavāyir-kōṭṭam.²

1 Some biographers of Aśoka have misunderstood the real significance of Indian monastic life, and have wrongly styled him monk-emperor.

2 Canto xxx, ll. 174-85.

IḻAṅKŌ, THE HISTORIAN

Iḻaṅkō led a secluded life, but a few scholars visited him now and then. His friend and companion was Kūlavāṇikaṇ Cīttalai Cāttanār, the celebrated Caṅkam poet and the great author of the Maṇimēkalai, another epic of no mean repute to which references have already been made. From the Patirruppattu and other Caṅkam works like the Puṇanānūru and Akanānūru anthologies, we gain an idea of the contemporary poets and scholars. Paraṇar to whom is attributed the fifth Ten was a contemporary of Iḻaṅkō. So also were Kapilar and others. Well qualified for the task as a member of an important royal family of the Tamil land, Iḻaṅkō, in his retirement, wrote what may be called a contemporary history of the three chief Tamil dynasties, and even planned to continue the epic Maṇimēkalai himself. But having heard that Cāttanār had begun and completed the work, he contented himself with the composition of the Cilappatikāram.¹ Like the other poets of his age, he did not go from court to court eulogizing one chieftain after another. Iḻaṅkō's task was to write a history, and if we bear in mind the impartiality with which he has described the Cōḷa and the Pāṇṭya chiefs, one has to conclude that he has in no way exaggerated the achievements of his brother. Thanks, then, to Iḻaṅkō, we have reliable material for reconstructing the history of the period.

HIS RELIGION

We need not enter again into the controversy regarding the age in which Iḻaṅkō lived. From what we have said of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan it follows that Iḻaṅkō also must be assigned to the latter half of the second century A.D. But far more important is the question of his religious faith. The term Kuṇavāyirkōṭṭam is interpreted by Aṭiyārkunallār as Arukaṅkōil, the name generally given to the Jaina temples. From this and from the term Aṭikaḷ being used as a suffix to his name, the late Mr. Kanakasabhai opined that Iḷaṅkō was a monk of the Nirgrantha sect of the Jains.¹

1 See the patikam to the Cilappatikāram.

But this question is largely interwoven with the faith adopted and adhered to by his brother Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ. Aṭikaḷ is a term of respect, and is in use even today among saints, seers and holy men to whatever faith they may belong. Again, the term kōṭṭam is a general name for temple, and cannot be said to denote particularly a Jaina temple.²

While we are examining this question it is necessary to call in the testimony of another datum that goes to establish his religion beyond doubt. This is the fact of Iḷaṅkō's attending the Vedic sacrifice elaborately performed by his brother after his return from his northern expedition. A follower of the Jaina cult, with his watchword of ahimsa, could not be expected to attend a function like the Vedic sacrifice. This, together with his presence on the occasion of the founding of the Pattinī cult, conclusively shows the Iḷaṅkō was a follower of the orthodox religion like his brother Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ. We have already seen that Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ was a follower of orthodox Hinduism. In fact, his very birth was due to special prayers offered to Siva.³ But his was not the Caivism of the rabid type. He worshipped Viṣṇu also. To him there was no difference between Siva and Viṣṇu. Seṅkuṭṭuvan's religion was what is known in the Sanskrit texts as the sanātana-dharma. He was a tolerant Hindu monarch. He was the originator of the cult of the Pattinī, to which Iṭaṅkō not only assented, but heartily co-operated in its accomplishment. One cannot make out any difference in his description between one particular sect and another. It is the view of the learned editor Dr. V. Swaminatha Aiyar that Saivism was the religion of Iṭaṅkō.¹ While agreeing in the main with this view, we may respectfully point out that at the time of which we are speaking, there were no cut and dried sects like Saivism and Vaiṣṇavism. It would be therefore more appropriate to say that he was a follower of the established faith of the land, which we may call Hinduism in its broader sense.

1 See V. Kanakasabhai, The Tamils 1800 Years Ago, p. 208.

2 Canto ix, l. 9 ff.

3 Canto xxvi, ll. 98-9.

XVII

COMMENTATORS AND COMMENTARIES: ARUMPATAVURAIYĀCIRIYAR

It is unfortunate that we have not been able to discover the name and age of the distinguished commentator of the Cilappatikāram, well known as Arumpatavuraiyāciriyaṛ. Though no clue is forthcoming for the identification of this commentator, this much is certain that his literary attainments were of a high order, and that his special knowledge of musical treatises was undoubted. This commentary Arumpatavurai is the older of the two extant commentaries, the other being that of Aṭiyārkunallāṛ. The excellence of the commentary is due to the fact that it explains fully the technical terms and phrases in the text, and interprets them in the light of their actual use in the Caṅkam epoch. Though only words and phrases which require interpretation are pressed into service, the commentary is complete, and throws welcome light on the portion of the text to which the comments of Aṭiyārkunallār are not available. In this way the commentary is useful and also valuable.

1 Sila., preface, p. 17.

That Aṭiyārkunallār was indebted to this Arumpata-vurai is obvious from his own commentary, where in one place¹ he explicitly acknowledges the sources from which he has taken his material. Aṭiyārkunallār quotes him once by the name Arumpatavuraiyācīriyar. A study of the two extant commentaries shows how Aṭiyārkunallār has simply followed him in many places, especially in the cantos which deal with the theory and practice of music. The greatness of the commentary lies in the fact that it furnishes rare and detailed notes on music and dancing. It is no exaggeration at all to say that without them nothing can be made out of the text. For, even with the two commentaries before us, it is difficult to get at the true interpretation of these technical terms relating to the art of music. Arumpatavuraiyācīriyar's religion was, so far as can be gathered from the commentary, the established religion of the land, i.e. Hinduism. From the fact that he quotes the extant astrological work Jinēndramālai in connexion with *ārūdams*² it may be said that he lived after the author of the Jinēndramālai. But when the latter flourished is itself doubtful.

XVIII

AṬIYĀRKKUNALLĀR

The other commentator is Aṭiyārkunallār, who is supposed to have lived, not without reason, in the fifteenth century A.D. As we have already said, he mentions Arumpatavuraiyācīriyar in one place and he has followed him in the main, sometimes adopting his very phrases and sentences. His is a commentary where due acknowledgement is made of the authorities from which he has taken his material. That he was a critical scholar and a researcher is seen from the portion of his commentary where he interprets the religion of the different characters in the epic, as also from his endeavour to fix the chronological limits of the exact day and time of Kōvalan's starting for Madura, etc. In pressing into service the astronomical data, though not in a way warranted by the original, the commentator shows himself an able astronomer and, we may add, an astrologer too. That he was an accomplished scholar and had made a special study of the musical treatises is evident from the names of the originals which occur in the commentary. The books quoted from are Intṛakāḷiyam, Pañcamarapu, Barataśēṇāpatiyam, and Mativāṇar-nāṭakattamiṇṇūl. It appears that these treatises, which were available to the commentator in his time, have been lost in the course of the last five centuries. The commentator is very meticulous about alien words, words in use in the Malaināṭu and the use of extinct proverbs. Such terms and expressions are interpreted with the care and the caution which they deserve. He also quotes an author Kaviccakkaravartti.¹ This may be a reference of Cayamkoṇṭāṇ, the author of the Kaliṇkattu-parāṇi, or Oṭṭa- Kūttar, the author of a parāṇi on Vikramacōla as testified to us by the commentator on the Takkayā-kapparaṇi.

1 Canto v, ll. 157-60, commentary.

2 Canto xvii, p. 443.

THE COMMENTARY INCOMPLETE

But it is unfortunate that the whole of the commentary is not available. It is not available in respect of the cantos entitled 'Kāṇalvari', 'Vaḷakkuraikātai', 'Vaṇcinamālai', 'Aḷarpaṭukātai' and 'Kaṭṭuraikātai', and the whole of 'Vaṇcikkāṇṭam'.¹

1 Canto v, ll. 76-88, commentary.

Two explanations can be offered. One is that he did not write a commentary on these cantos and the other is that these portions have been lost. The latter theory seems more plausible in view of the internal evidence which can be gathered from the commentary. The following may be adduced.²

(1) In his gloss on the term vari in 'Araṇkērrukātai', he says more details are furnished in 'Kāṇalvari'.³

(2) Again, in the same katai, in his gloss on the yaḷ (l. 26) he says that an elaborate examination of it is made in 'Kāṇalvari'.⁴

(3) In commenting on lines 27-8 of 'Vēṇirkātai' he remarks that he has spoken of it before under aṇi etc. This aṇi is in the original text of 'Kāṇalvari', l. 3.

(4) Again, in commenting on lines 106-7 of 'Araṇkērrukātai', the remark is made that it would be examined in extenso in 'Aḷarpaṭukātai'.⁵

(5) Further, in his comment on lines 45-71 of 'Vēṇirkātai' he refers to the fact that additional details are given in 'Kaṭṭuraikātai', and a reference may be made to it.⁶

1 Cantos xxiv-xxx.

2 Sila., preface, p. 20.

3 ibid., p. 88.

4 ibid., p. 100.

5 p. 116.

6 p. 237.

It is thus established that Aṭiyārkkuṇallār certainly wrote his commentary on all the kātais, and that the work as a complete one is now lost to us. Though we have no internal evidence to substantiate the theory that he also wrote a commentary on 'Vaṇcikkāṇṭam', yet in the light of his remarks quoted above, and in view of the fact that some portions of the commentary which according to him were actually written were lost, it is reasonable to assume that the commentator wrote a full commentary which is not traceable now. It may be that one day we shall find it in some private library in an out-of-the-way village.

HIS RELIGION

Though there are no definite data regarding the religion of the commentator, the assumption may be made that he was a Saiva by faith. His leanings towards Jainism can be proved by his interpretation of the common terms as referring to the Jaina in many a place. To quote one example, he makes the kōṭṭam in the Kuṇavāyirkōṭṭam Arukaṇkōil, which has afforded some foundation for the theory that Iṭaṅkō-Aṭikaḷ, who made it his residence, must have been a Jain.

VALUE OF COMMENTARIES

In examining the value of these annotations as sources of information of the early history of the ancient Tamil kingdoms, the late P. T. Srinivasa Iyengar was not prepared to attach any importance to them.¹ But this view of the learned author cannot stand. It may be true to some extent that the commentary is coloured by personal views, but generally the annotator aims at giving the interpretation handed down by an unbroken tradition, without the help of which no intelligible meaning could be attached to several underlying allusions or references. If this interpretation can be corroborated by an independent source or sources, it compels our acceptance and approval¹.

1 History of the Tamils, pp. 371-2.

Examining the work in this light, and remembering the paucity of the materials for reconstructing the history of early South India, we must ever be grateful to these annotators, whose authority cannot be questioned inasmuch as their works are quoted by the still more celebrated later annotators. Dr. V. Swaminatha Aiyar is inclined to the view that Naccinārkkinīyar was one such annotator who quotes Aṭṭiyārkunallār.² If this is so, it speaks well of the authority, value and standing of our commentator on the epic.

1 See S. K. Aiyangar, Evolution of Hindu Administrative Institutions in South India, p. 14.

2 For example cf. the lines மறை முது முதல்வன் பின்னர் பொருப்பன் of 'Vēṭṭuvavari' with ll. 40-2 of Maturaikkānci, commentary.

CILAPPATIKARAM

PATIKAM

THE hill-Kuravas came in a group before Kuṭakkōc-Ceral Iḷaṅkō¹ who had renounced his royalty and was permanently residing in the hermitage of Kuṇavāyil² and said: 'A chaste lady who had lost a breast came to the shade of the vēṅkai tree, rich in its golden flowers; there the King of the Dēvas appeared, to show her her loving husband, and took her to Heaven before our very eyes. This was verily a wonder. Be gracious to know this!'

At that time, the great Tamil poet Cāttan³, who was by his side, exclaimed, 'I know how this happened', and began to narrate the details. 'In the ancient city of undying fame, Pukār, belonging to the Cōḷa wearing the ātti garland,⁴ there was a merchant, named Kōvalan⁵. He lost his great wealth by dalliance with a dancing-girl who was expert in her art. His wife was Kaṇṇaki. With the

1 The younger brother of Seṅkuṭṭuvan.

2 The term in the text is Kuṇavāyirkōṭṭam. Aṭiyārkku-nallār describes kōṭṭam as a Jaina temple. But this does not seem to be correct. The term kōṭṭam (Sans., kōṣṭha) means any building sacred to any divinity and not particularly to Arukan, the Jaina deity. Kuṇavāyil (literally, east gate), was the name of the suburb to the east of Vañci.

3 The Caṅkam poet and author of the Maṇimēkalai.

4 Ātti=bauhinia racemosa. The Tamil kings were distinguished by the garlands they wore. The Cōḷa king had the ātti, the Pāṇṭya and the Cēra kings used the margosa and the palmyra respectively.

5 Sans., Gopāla.

intention of selling her tinkling anklet he went with her to the great Pāṇṭyan city of Madura, highly renowned in literature. When he was taking it for sale in the great bazaar, he happened to show it to a goldsmith who said that it was fit to be worn only by the queen and not by any one else. Asking Kōvalaṇ to stay there the goldsmith went to, and told, the king that he saw the queen's anklet (which the goldsmith himself had previously stolen) in the hands of the thief. Since that was the moment when Kōvalaṇ's destiny was being fulfilled, the king who wore the garland of margosa blossoms did not inquire into the matter fully, but ordered his tried watchmen to kill the thief and fetch the anklet. The wife of the murdered Kōvalaṇ having no refuge, shed tears copiously; and because she was so very virtuous, the Pāṇṭya suffered great distress when she plucked out one of her breasts, on which lay a string of pearls, and thereby burnt the great city of Madura. That lady of chastity of high repute is this one (referred to by the Kuravas)'.¹

Hearing this, Iḷaṅkō asked: 'You said that destiny was fulfilled.² How was that?'

In reply, Cāttan said, 'Holy man, listen! I lay down at midnight in the Veḷḷiyambalam³ of the Maṇṛappotiyl, 1 This is the central theme underlying the whole epic. The story seems to elucidate the fundamental belief of Hinduism and its dissenting sects, like Buddhism and Jainism, that a man's fortune or misfortune in this birth is the result of his actions, good or bad, in past birth or births.

2 Veḷḷiyambalam (literally, silver hall) is an open space for the use of the public. Note there are Ponnambalam, Maṇiyambalam, etc., referring to particular shrines. The term Maṇṛappotiyl shows that the village assembly usually met in the temple compound, where it is natural to suppose that large and shady trees were planted and allowed to grow.

sacred to Lord Siva who wears the konrai flower on His tuft, in the hoary city of Madura of untainted fame. I saw the tutelary deity of Madura appearing before the heroic Pattini who was in deep distress and saying: "O lady, who raised furious flames from your breast! Now it is that the action of your previous birth has become completed. In your previous birth, the wife of the merchant Caṅkaman of Ciṅkapuram¹ of undying fame laid a curse upon your husband and yourself. O lady of the beautiful tresses of hair! You will see your husband (again) fourteen days from now, not in his human form, but in the divine." This guileless account did I hear. So we shall write a poem, with songs, illustrating the three truths that dharma will become the God of Death to kings who swerve from the path of righteousness, that it is natural for great men to adore a chaste lady of great fame, and that destiny will manifest itself and be fulfilled; and as these truths centre round an anklet of artistic beauty, the poem (pāṭṭuṭaicceyyuḷ) can be named Cilappatikāram. As this story relates to all the three crowned monarchs, it is only proper, O venerable saint, that you should write it.'

In response to this request of Cāttan, the saint of extraordinary repute (Iḷaṅkō) composed a poem, consisting of thirty parts, which were the following: The song of benediction; the story about the parents establishing the hero as a householder; the story of the dancing-girl Mātavi receiving royal recognition for her skill on the stage; the chapter in praise of the twilight; the canto narrating the celebration of Indra's festival in the city; the canto describing the sports on the seashore; the section describing the kāṇalvari and Mātavi's sorrow at the heat caused by the blazing sun; the canto dealing with the sight of the city (Madura) and that of the forest; the canto dealing with the song of the hunters and the sojourn of Kōvalan with his spouse outside the city; the section dealing with the visit to the city; the section describing the shelter found for the fair lady Kaṇṇaki; the account of the murder of Kōvalan; the canto in which the dance of the cowherdesses is described; that dealing with the distress of the people who heard the news of the burning of the city; the song (kātai) dealing with the entry into the city which was in utter turmoil; the canto describing the manner in which Kaṇṇaki presented her case before the king; the vow, the story of the great conflagration, the facts revealed by the tutelary deity of Madura to Kaṇṇaki; the dance of the hill-damsels wearing fragrant flowers; the story of the seeing, taking and bathing of the slab of stone in the holy Ganges, and the planting of the image; the story of the praise offered to, and the boon obtained from, the Goddess of Chastity.

1 Ciṅkapuram is one of the capitals of ancient Kaliṅka.

These stories which are narrated in poetic form (uraiyiṭaiyiṭa pāṭṭuṭaicceyyuḷ) by Iḷaṅkō-Aṭigaḷ were heard by Kūlavāṇikan¹ Cāttan of Madura. This is the account of the origin of the poem which elaborates the trivarga (pālvakai).²

1 This indicates that Cāttan belonged to the community of corn-chandlers. The term vāṇiya is from the Sanskrit vaṇik a merchant. Though a common name etymologically for all merchants, it is used in practice only in connexion with oil-pressers. Amongst the other vāṇiyas there were ilaivaṇiyas or betelsellers and numerous other branches. Kūlavāṇiyas are said to have dealt in grain.

2 The trivarga are dharma (Tam., aṟam), artha (Tam., poruḷ) and kāma (Tam., iṇbam). The expression shows the naturalization of the idea of puruṣārthas in the Tamil land.

URAIPERUKATTURAI¹

1. From that day forth the Pāṇṭyaṇ kingdom was deprived of rains, and famine-stricken. This was followed by fever and plague. Verrivērcēliyaṇ² reigning at Korikai³ propitiated the Lady of Chastity by sacrificing a thousand goldsmiths, and celebrated a festival when there was a downpour causing fertility to the land. Thereupon the kingdom was rid of disease and distress.

2. Hearing this, the Iḷam-Kōcar⁴ of the Koṅkunāṭu⁵ instituted festivities in honour of the Lady of Chastity in their land, and this resulted in plentiful rains.

3. On hearing this, Gajabāhu⁶ of Ceylon encircled by the sea, built a shrine for the Lady of Chastity where daily sacrifices were performed. Thinking that she would

1 This was added to patikam by an early editor whose identity is not known.

2 The successor of Neṭuñceḷiyaṇ.

3 Quondam capital of the Pāṇṭyaṇ kingdom. It was the same as Kavāṭapuram (seaport capital) referred to in the Kauṭaliya Arthaśāstra and the Rāmāyaṇa.

4 The smaller chieftains of Tamiḷnāṭu. Their services were requisitioned by great kings like the Pāṇṭyaṇ. (See Maturaikkāñci, ll 773-4.)

5 This is to be identified as the western part of the Koṅku region: Tuḷunāṭu, Coorg and parts of Mysore. This may be called Kōcarnāṭu.

6 The Cēra King Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ's contemporary in Ceylon.

remove the distress (of his land), he also instituted annual festivals commencing with the month of Āṭi; then the rains came to stay, and increased the fertility of the land so as to produce unfailing crops.

4. At this the Cōla king Perumkiḷḷi¹ built at Uraiyūr a shrine for Pattinikkaṭavuḷ, and instituted daily offerings, thinking that she would shower her blessings at all times.

1. The contemporary Cōla king.

NURCIRAPPUPPAYIRAM

Veṇpā

THE unexcelled language of the opus of the ascetic Cēraṇ, the prince of Kuṭanāṭu, highly spoken of by the people of Kūṭal (Madura), resembles a range of hills with its group of peaks as seen in a mirror.¹

Kaṭṭaḷaikkalitturai

The crown-jewel of the great Cēra composed the Cilappatikāram, much appreciated by the people of Pūmpukār, which was the residence of wealthy merchants who formed one of the four famous castes created by the four-faced Lord (Brahmā), and which was the dwelling-place of authorities on Tamil literature.

¹ This and the following stanza appear to be ancient compositions, but it is not possible to trace their authorship.

1000 1000 1000

1000 1000 1000
1000 1000 1000
1000 1000 1000
1000 1000 1000

1000 1000 1000
1000 1000 1000
1000 1000 1000
1000 1000 1000
1000 1000 1000
1000 1000 1000

1000 1000 1000 1000 1000 1000 1000 1000
1000 1000 1000 1000 1000 1000 1000 1000

I. PUKARKKANTAM

CANTO I

MANKALAVALTUPPATAL

OR

THE SONG OF BENEDICTION

Praised be the Moon!¹ Praised be the Moon, for, like the cool white umbrella of the king who wears the pollen-spreading garland, He blesses our beautiful world.

Praised be the Sun! Praised be the Sun, for, like the commands of the Lord of the Kāverināṭu, He revolves round the golden-peaked Mēru.

Praised be the mighty Clouds! Praised be the mighty Clouds, for, like him whose land the frightful sea surrounds, they stand on high, and pour their gifts to men below.

Praised be sweet Pukār!² Praised be sweet Pukār, for it is as famous as the glory of the (Cōla) royal line all over the wide world, encircled by the waters of the sea.

1 For a similar invocation of the deities see Takkayā-kapparaṇi, 'Kaṭavul', st. 9, comm. It may be noted that the first deity invoked is the Moon, thus bearing testimony to the prevalence of the moon cult in ancient Tamil India.

2 Pukār, Kākandi, Kāvīrippūmpaṭṭiṇam, and Paṭṭiṇam, are other names for Kāvērippaṭṭiṇam, the ancient capital city of the Cōlas on the seashore. According to some, it is the Khaveris Emporium mentioned by Ptolemy in the first century A.D. The inscriptions secured from the modern Kāvērippaṭṭiṇam and its vicinity leave no doubt as to its identity with Kāvīrippūmpaṭṭiṇam alias Pukār. (An. Rep. Ep., 1919, p. 92.)

Those who have fully heard and known all that is to be heard and known,¹ hold the view that, like the Potiyil hill² and the Himalayan range, the unique city of Pukār, renowned for its generations of unexcelled ancient families, stands immutable as the great ones who live there.

In that city of Pukār which equalled Heaven in its fame and the Serpent World³ in its enjoyments, there lived a celebrated sea-captain (mānāikaṇ),⁴ liberal in his gifts like the rain-bearing clouds. He had a daughter, Kaṇṇaki,⁵

1 The term kēlvi in l. 19 may also be interpreted as the Sruti or the Vēdic lore. It occurs in the sense of the Vēdas in Paṭirr., third Ten, st. 1, l. 1.

2 The Potiyil hill is noted as the residence of the sage Agastya (Bhāga. Pur., Bk. X, ch. 79, st. 16-17). This hill of the Pāṇṭyas can be identified with the Malaya, otherwise known as Chandanādri or Candanācala. Perhaps the epithet Malayadhvaṇa attributed to the Pāṇṭyan king in the Mhb., Bk. III, ch. 281, st. 44f (ch. Raghu, canto iv, st. 46-9) is after the hill Malaya. The Tamil name Potikai is the original of the Bettigo of Ptolemy (J. W. MacCrindle, Ptolemy 1885, p. 78).

3 Nākanāṭu; also Pavaṇam. According to the Jaina scriptures the joys in the Nākalōka are greater than those in heaven or Svargalōka: cf. Mhb., 'Ādi', ch. 234.

4 The terms mānāikaṇ (Sans., mahānāyaka=great leader) and mācāttuvāṇ (Sans., mahāśārtha) connote respectively 'members of maritime commercial ventures' and 'members of caravan trade': see canto ii, ll. 7-8; also Studies in Tamil Literature and History p. 77, n. 2.

5 It is to be noted here that the heroine of the story has been mentioned first and then the hero. This is because the story from start to finish centres round the heroine. Or it may point to a custom in ancient India of speaking first of the wife and then of the husband in referring to a married couple (vadhūvara), e.g. Sītārāma, Pārvati Paramēśvara.

who was like a golden creeper and was¹ nearing twelve years old. She had high qualities on account of which women adored and praised her, exclaiming, 'She is Lakṣhmī² of praiseworthy form, seated on the lotus, and her excellence is that of the faultless northern star (Arun-tati.'³

In that selfsame city lived an inland merchant prince (mācāttuvān) of abounding wealth, who, along with his relations, was placed in the foremost rank of the aristocracy by the monarch of that great kingdom. He was, in sooth, the lord of a rich treasure⁴ and gave away his earnings to others in need. He had a son, named Kōvalan,⁵ nearing sixteen years. Kōvalan's expanding fame made the earth

1 The term akavaiyā! means that she was not yet twelve years old.

2 Consort of Viṣṇu and Goddess of Wealth.

3 Aruntati is the wife of the sage Vasiṣṭha, one of the seven celebrated sages who went by the name of Saptarṣis. She was distinguished for her chastity.

Chaste women are generally compared to Aruntati (see Patir., fourth Ten. st. 1, l. 28). The Bōdhāyana Gr̥hyasūtra rules that a married couple should see the star Aruntati and the Pole Star on the first day of their marriage (Govt. Oriental Series, Mysore, 1904, p. 124). Legend has it that each of the seven primeval sages had his own wife. Of these, the wives of six sages excluding that of Vasiṣṭha fell in love with Agni and gave their breast-milk to Subrahmaṇya. These six became Kṛittika Nakṣhatras which are six in number (the Pleiades); but Aruntati stood firm in her chastity and attained an honourable place as an auspicious star fit to be seen by chaste and pure women so that they might ever lead holy lives. (Mhb., 'Vana Parva', ch. 226-30. Also S. Sorenson's Index, p. 91).

4 It may be interpreted as twofold treasure and the comparison may be to Kubēra, the Lord of Divine Treasure, Saṅkha and Padma.

5 Note here also the term akavaiyān.

all too small to bear it. Moon-faced maidens, skilled in song and sweet in voice, fondly said to each other, 'O, He is Subrahmaṇiya nārnate !'¹ and revealed their excessive love for him when they spoke in praise of him in their own gatherings.

Then, (Kaṇṇaki and Kōvalan), their worthy parents longed to see, on a happy day, as a bridal pair. Happy in such thoughts, they sent forth fair maidens, seated on an elephant's neck, to invite to the wedding all those who lived in that great city.

As they went forth into the streets, drums were beaten: mirudangams were sounded: conches were blown: and white umbrellas were lifted high as if in kingly procession. O, how enchanting was their entry into the pavilion, glimmering with pearls beneath the canopy of blue silk and with dazzling pillars, decked with diamonds and beautified by overhanging garlands! That was the day on which the Moon moving in the sky approached the star Rōkiṇi;²

1. He is the War-God in whose honour Kālidāsa wrote his classic Kumārasambhava. He is a very popular deity in Tamil India (see T. A. Gopinatha Rao, Elements of Hindu Iconography, Vol. II, p. 415). According to Tolk., he is the tutelary deity of the hillmen (kuṟiṇṇi am) (Akam., sūtra 5). Among the Caṅkam works the Tirumurukārruppātai and one-fourth of the Paripāṭal are sung in glorification of Kumāra. Incidentally it may be noticed that the arguments in favour of a later date for the Paripāṭal (seventh century A.D.), on the basis of astronomical data, put forward by the late Swamikannu Pillai (see Indian Ephemeris, Vol. I, Pt. II, Appendix III; 'The Chronology of Early Tamil Literature', and further examined by K. G. Sankara in J.R.A.S., 1932, pp. 541-5), are not tenable in the light of other and more positive data.

2. Cf. Akam., st. 136. That Rōkiṇi is an auspicious planet is attested to by Vēdic authority (Vedic Index, Vol. I, p. 415), not to speak of the later Bṛhat-Jātaka and similar literature. Rōkiṇi, when Kōvalan who walked around the holy fire,¹ in accordance with scriptural injunctions as directed by the revered priest, approached his bride, divinely fair, resembling the star Aruntati. How fortunate were those who enjoyed such a splendid sight! Lovely maidens, bringing spices and flowers, spake and sang, and looked bewitching. Women with full breasts and glowing tresses took with them sandal-paste, frankincense, perfumes and powders. Ladies with lovely teeth bore lamps, vessels, and pālikai pots² of tender shoots. These maidens, who looked like golden creepers and whose hair was decked with flowers, showered blossoms on the bridal pair, saying: 'May you live a flawless life, with a love that knows no separation, and held in close and unrelaxing embrace!' They then led Kaṇṇaki, the Aruntati of this vast world, to the auspicious nuptial bed with the prayer that the royal tiger-emblem, engraved on this side of the Himalayas, might remain for ever on the moreover, was the favourite of the twenty-seven wives of the Moon.

1. The fire-rite was already in vogue in the Tamil land for purposes of marriage. It seems to have been a regular institution ever since the age of Talk. Aruntati (Sans., Arundhati) is the star Alcor in the Great Bear. She was the daughter of Kāśyapa, sister of Nārada, and wife of Vasiṣṭha. As the model of conjugal felicity she figures in the Sāstraic literature. The reference indicates the adoption by the Tamil Vaiśyas of the Aryan marital custom and procedure. It is worth noting that Kaṇṇaki was barely twelve at the time of her marriage.

2 Pālikai pots are the chief feature of marriage and other samskāras among the Hindus even today. The Bōdhāyana Gṛhyasūtra mentions five pālikais for purposes of marriage. The technical term ankurārpaṇa (p. 328 of the Mysore edition), probably suggests that the married couple should be blessed with good and healthy progeny.

golden crest of that mountain,¹ and that the Cōla king (Cempian)² who possessed the fierce javelin in battle, might throw his matchless discus³ all over the world.

1 The reference here is to Karikāla's engraving the tiger crest on the Himalayas. For a learned study on the life and achievements of Karikāla see Ulakanātham Pillai, Karikālaiccōlar, in Tamil. If we compare these lines with canto v, ll. 90-104, there is the implication that Karikāla was not satisfied with being the overlord of all India and his ambition was to cross the snow-clad hills and to extend his conquests to Tibet, China, etc. (Note the terms ippāl and uppāl.) But the Himalayas were a stumbling block; he could not proceed further and had to return. Pandit M. Raghava Aiyangar is of opinion that the Cōla king's route lay through the passes between Sikkim and Bhutan, leading to the Chambi Valley in Tibet. This is attested to by the fact that even today one of the passes there, and the mountain range as well, go by the name of the Cōla Pass and the Cōla Range. (Imperial Gazetteer of India, 'Sikkim', Vol. X, p. 327, Vol. XXII, p. 365. Encyclopaedia Britannica, Vol. V, p. 667, s. v. Sikkim, Vol. XX, p. 640.) Kalaimakal (Madras), Vol. I, p. 56 ff.

2 Cempiyan is an epithet for the Cōla king. The tradition transmitted in Tamil literature bears evidence to the fact that one of the great ancestors of the Cōlas was Cipicakravarti, and as coming from his family, the Cōlas claimed the title Cemplyan. If this tradition has any value at all, it demonstrates that the Cōla dynasty is only a branch of a North Indian dynasty of which Cipi was an honoured member. But there are scholars who look upon this dynasty as indigenous to South India.

3 An emblem of universal sovereignty.

CANTO II

MANAIYARAMPATUTTA KATAI

OR

SETTING UP HOME

THE untold wealth of the seafaring merchants of the rich city (Pukār) made even far-famed monarchs covet it. The varieties of foreign merchandise, rare commodities brought to the city by ships and caravans, were so vast that, even if the whole world, encircled by the roaring seas, flocked into it, its wealth would not become diminished. In the delights which it yielded, and in the presence of noble persons, (the parents of) Kaṇṇaki the lotus-eyed and her loving husband Kōvalaṇ, who were nobly born and blessed with inexhaustible ancestral wealth, the city resembled Uttarakuru,¹ the residence of great penance-performers.

In the middle story of their lofty mansion, they (Kōvalaṇ and Kaṇṇaki) seated themselves on a gem-legged couch which looked as if it had been made for them by Maya.² As they were enjoying themselves, the

1 The Uttarakuru (Vedic Index, p. 84) is perhaps the semi-mythical region of enjoyment and bliss. Six such places are distinguished also in the Jaina literature. See Divākaram, st. 12. For a similar description of the Uttarakuru, see Mhb., 'Sabhā Parva', ch. 29, st. 66-71. The Aitarēya Brāhmaṇa locates it as a trans-Himalayan country (ch. 8, st. 14). According to Pliny, Bk. VI, c. 17, Amometus wrote a book on the Attacorae (Uttarakuru). See J. W. MacGrindle, Megasthenes and Arrianā 1926, pp. 76-9.

2 Though Aṭṭyārkunallār interprets the term Mayāṇ as the Carpenter of the Gods, Sanskrit tradition has it that Viśvakarma soft south wind entered, at the proper time with the bees, through the lattice windows ornamented with a series of jewelled hangings, bringing the sweet fragrance of the cool āmpal, the close-petalled kuvaḷai, the half-opened lotus filled with humming drones, and several other flowers which blossomed in fields and on the surface of small pools, to wit, the pleasing tāḷai and the white wide-mouthed kōtai, and blew over them. Along with it came the drones which had partaken of the tiny particles of māṭavi from the arbour of the campaka, and which were in eager search for the sweet-smelling tresses of the charming damsel with her beaming face.

(Bathed in such a breeze), the couple passed out into the open terrace where, under the cool rays of the moon, the God of Love sat holding his arrow of flowers. There they laid themselves down in a bed covered with pollen attracting humming bees. Kōvalaṇ amused himself by painting, on the broad shoulders of his lady-love, the sugar-cane¹ and the *vaḷḷi*², when they looked like the sun and the moon shedding their lustre upon the whole sea-girt world. He wore a garland of jasmine whose sparkling white petals had been opened by the honey-seeking bee. Hers was a garland of the charming close-petalled kaḷunir. With their wreaths intertwined owing to their close embrace, both of unsatiated love grew wearied when Kōvalaṇ looked into the beaming face of Kaṇṇaki, and spoke to her in words of prattling endearment :

was the architect of the Gods, and Maya was the architect of the Asuras.

1 The bow of the God of Love is said to be of sugar-cane.

2 Vaḷḷi is evidently the heavenly creeper known as kāmavalli. Cf. Jivakacintāmaṇi, st. 365, where the kāmavalli is compared to a lovely lady.

‘My dear, though Civa has adorned his tuft of hair by placing the beautiful crescent moon¹ in it so that the gods may praise him. He will yet give it away to you so as to make it your forehead: for, was not the moon born along with you?’²

‘Likewise the bodyless God of Love will be happy to give you his big sugar-cane bow, so that it may become your dark eyebrows; for, is it not a law of warfare that the vanquished foe should yield up his weapons?’

‘Indra too is bound to give you his thunderbolt³ which protects the Dēvas, saying that it will fittingly become your waist, for, were you not born long before ambrosia?’

‘Though the six-faced one (Subrahmaṇya) has no cause for doing it, still He has given you his long lance, red as fire, so as to form your two dark, cloudlike, red-cornered eyes; he naturally wishes to see me in distress!’

1 This is apparently a reference to the aṣṭamīcandra, i. e. the crescent of the eighth lunar day, which is generally compared to the forehead of beautiful ladies. Among the Sahasraṇāma of the Dēvī, one is aṣṭamīcandrābībhṛāja dalikasthalaśōbhītā.

2 The reference is to the legend of the churning of the ocean by the Dēvas and the Asuras for nectar which the former drank and became immortal. With the nectar came also the Moon and the Goddess of Wealth. To Kōvalan, Kaṇṇaki is none else than this Lakṣhmī. See Mhb. ‘Ādi’, ch. 17-19 for a fuller description; also S. Sorenson’s Index, pp. 34-5.

3 Like nectar, Indra’s Vajra or thunderbolt is said to have sprung from out of the churning ocean. It is a two-headed trident with a slender handle in the middle, which is compared here to the lady’s waist. According to the Sanskrit tradition, it was the bone of the sage Dadhīci that was transformed into the Vajra, the war-implement of Indra. (See Mhb., ‘Vanaparva’, ch. 99; Salyaparva, ch. 52.)

‘By your complexion you have put to shame the gem-tinted peacock with its beautiful black plumes, which hides itself in the woods. O lady of the shining face! By your soft and lovely gait you have put to shame the swan which hides itself amidst the lotuses of the cool tank. The little green parrots are ashamed of themselves when they listen to your charming voice which assumes the character of the flute, viṇā, and ambrosia: yet, O lady of stately gait, they love to stay for ever on your flower-like hands.

‘O lady with charming tresses fragrant with flowers! Of what use to you are dressing maids and ornaments other than your flawless tāli?¹ Again, beyond a few flowers to be worn on your black hair, what need is there for any splendid wreath of flowers? Nor does your hair require any paste of kastūri. Common frankincense is quite sufficient. Likewise with the sandal-paste figures painted on your beautiful breasts, there is no need for a string of pearls. What folly induced them to deck you with so many ornaments causing drops of perspiration on your face, and pain to your slender waist!

O purest gold! O conch-white pearl!

O faultless fragrance! O sugar-cane, honey!

Unattainable beauty, life-giving nectar!

O noble child of nobly-born merchants!

1 The commentators seem to interpret the term maṅkalavaṇi as natural beauty, and this may fit in with the context. The other interpretation of maṅkalavaṇi is tāli or tirumāṅkalyam, the wearing of which on the occasion of a marriage seems to have been originally a South Indian custom, later adopted by the followers of the Brahmanical religion. Cf. canto iv. l. 50. See, for instance, the chapter in the Rāmāyaṇa describing the marriage of Rāma and Sītā (Bk. I, ch. 73), where there is no mention of māṅkalya-sūtram. The term sūtram in the sense of tāli occurs in the later Smṛtis.

Shall I say that you are an unborn gem of the hills?

Shall I say that you are nectar not produced from the sea?

Shall I say that you are melody not born of the yāl?

O my girl of dark and flowing hair !

Uttering ceaselessly such well-worded speeches, the ecstatic lover with bright garlands, spent with his fair lady-love days and days in deep enjoyment.

One such day, the venerable lady (mother of Kōvalan) established the lady of abundant and flowing tresses (Kaṇṇaki) in a house of her own, where she provided her with faithful servants and wealth of all kinds, so as to serve¹ her near and dear ones, ascetics and guests, in a manner appropriate to the householder's life, that thereby her fame might increase.

Some years passed, and Kaṇṇaki in the discharge of her household duties earned a name worthy to be praised.

VENPĀ

They (Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki), who (respectively) resembled Kāma (God of Love) and Rati (Goddess of Love), enjoyed close embraces like smoke-coloured serpents; they enjoyed all sorts of pleasures as if realizing the instability of life on the earth.²

1 The chief duties of the lady of a house were the giving of gifts to the deserving, the serving of Brahmans, and the entertaining of ascetics and guests, as evidenced by Kaṇṇaki's own words in canto xvi, ll. 71-3. This is also the prescription of the Dharmaśāstras or law-codes like that of Maṇu. A student of Tiruvaḷḷuvar's Tirukkuraḷ will find elaborate prescriptions for the above-mentioned duties of the householder.

2 The poet here hints at the coming tragedy.

CANTO III
ARANKERRUKATHI

OR THE DEBUT

THE great sage (Agastya) of the divine Potiyil hill (once) cursed Indra's son¹ (along with Ūrvacī)², and the latter obtained redemption by displaying her skill on the stage.³ From that distinguished line of celestial nymphs, was descended Mātavi, noted for her deeds of great distinction, as well as for her broad shoulders and beautiful tresses which scattered the pollen of flowers. In dance and song, and in grace of form,⁴ she underwent training for seven years, succeeding in all three; and at the age of twelve she was in a position to display

1 Jayanta, the son of Indra, was cursed, together with Ūrvacī, by the sage Agastya for misbehaviour. Jayanta was reborn as a bamboo in the Vindhya Hills and Ūrvacī as a dancing-girl on the earth. According to the Suddhāṇḍappirakāśa, a late musical treatise, Ūrvacī was born first in the city of Kāñci.

2 Ūrvacī (Tam., Uruppaśi) is a daughter of the Gods (an apsaras). For the origin and career of Ūrvacī see Matsya Purāṇa, ch. 24, st. 25 ff. Cf. Dikshitar, Matsya Purāṇa—a study, 1935, pp. 42-3.

3 The term used is talaikkōl. It might be a staff used by the dancer to serve as an equilibrium. For details see ll. 114 ff.

4 The chief requisites are dancing, singing and natural beauty (aḷaku). If aḷaku is interpreted as an art, it may mean 'proper rhythm'. The period of training was seven years commencing from the age of five.

her talents before the reigning king¹ who wore heroic anklets.

Her dancing master knew the characteristics of the two schools of the dancing art.² He could effectively combine the different dancing poses with the vilakku song.³ He had a clear knowledge of the established rules of the eleven modes of body-movement and limb-movement (āṭal), of the songs (pāṭṭu),⁴ of the resounding instruments (koṭṭu), as also of the dance (āṭal), of gestures (pāṭal),⁵ of the measured beats (pāṇi),⁶ and of time-beats (tūkkū).⁷

1 According to the commentator the king under reference is Karikāla. But a study of the chronology of the early centuries of the Christian era shows that the king referred to must have been a successor to Karikāla. This has been examined in the Introduction.

2 The two schools are the dēśi (secular) and mārga (orthodox), which are the two kinds of kūttu. There were a number of kūttus which came under one category or the other. Like kūttu, music was also classified as dēśi and mārga. (See Introduction by M. S. Ramaswami Aiyar to his edition of the Svaramēḷakalā-nidhi, Annamalai University, 1932).

3 Of the fourteen limbs of vilakku three are distinguished, vēntuvilakku, paṭaivilakku and ūrvilakku. For details see Aṭiyār-kunallār's commentary, Silā., p. 82.

4 The expression pāṭṭu here is a reference to the Akam, and Puṇam, nāṭakam, or dramatic compositions.

5 The gestures of pāṭal are said to be of eight kinds.

6 This was either with the hands or a metal disk. Was the Tamil technical expression paṇ derived from it? The earliest texts of the Tēvāram and Nālāyiraprapantam classify the psalms according to paṇs.

7 This tūkkū is said to be of seven kinds. The reverberations are created by the manipulation of time-beats. Probably pāṇi and tūkkū composed a full tālam.

During the course of the exhibition of the dancing art, composed of the foregoing elements, he knew when only one hand had to be used for gesticulation (piṇṭi),¹ and when both the hands had to be used (piṇaiyal). He also knew when the hands had to be used for exhibiting action alone (toḷirṅkai), and when for graceful effect alone (eḷirṅkai). Knowing as he did the conventions at the time of dancing, he avoided the mixing up of the single-hand demonstration (kūṭai) with the double-hand demonstration (vāram) and vice versa, as also the mixing up of pure gesture with gesticulatory movement and vice versa. In the movements of the feet also, he did not mix up the kuravai with the vari.² He was such an expert.

Her music teacher was likewise skilled in handling the *yāl*³ and the kuḷal (flute),⁴ in the technique of the tāḷam

1 The piṇṭi consisted of twenty-four exhibitions and the piṇaiyal of thirteen.

2 These are the kuravaikkūttu and the varikkūttu.

3 Four varieties of yāl are distinguished: pēriyāl, makarayāl, śakōṭayāl, and śeṅkōṭṭiyāl of 21, 19, 14 and 7 strings respectively. (See also Puṇam, st. 152, comment) It may be pointed out that Sārngadēva's viṇā was of 22 strings, and that it was simplified by Rāmāmātya (16th cent.) into one of seven strings, and by his critic and successor Vēnkaṭamakhi (17th cent.) into one of five strings. We cannot say positively what was the type prevalent in the Tamil country. The yāl was apparently the viṇā, known as such because of the figure of the conventional lion into which the shaft was worked at the end. The terms makarayāl etc., give a clue to it. The lute is an instrument going back to Vēdic times.

4 The kuḷal was made of one of five materials, namely, bamboo, sandal, bronze, red catechu, or coromandel ebony. Of these, bamboo was regarded as the best material, bronze middling, and others as distinctly inferior. The flute was as ancient an instrument as the lute and the drum.

(timing), in the manipulation of the vocal chords, and in the production of the soft low note of the mirutaṅkam.¹ He could make all these sounds harmonize agreeably to the dance (āṭal). Knowing what music was appropriate to the vari and āṭal, he had the discriminating knowledge of all the subtle sounds of the flawless dēsikam music. Because of his perfect knowledge he could elaborate upon and classify all varieties of dances and music, and still remain true to the spirit of their composers.

There was, again, the learned composer of songs whose knowledge of the Tamil language was complete and known to the whole Tamil land surrounded by the noisy sea.² An authority in the art of dramaturgy he had a knowledge of the two branches, *vēttiyaḷ*³ and *potuviyaḷ*⁴, and exhibited it in his compositions. Realizing the improper expressions employed by others (his rivals), he scrupulously avoided such defects in his own dramatic poetry.⁵

1 This is one of the thirty-one skin instruments of music.

2 Surrounded by sea on three sides and extending up to Vēṇkaṭam (modern Tirupati Hills) in the north and the Kumārī in the south was the ancient Tamil land. Here three branches of Tamil literature were current.

3 The branch relating to Akam, in the dramatic composition.

4 The branch relating to Puram, in dramatic works.

5 The technical term Tamil is of three kinds, iyal, icai and naṭakam. See V. G. Suryanarayana Sastri, History of the Tamil Language, 1930, and Pandit V. Swaminatha Aiyar's Saṅkattamiḷum Pīrkalattamiḷum, 1929, pp. 45-52. Iyal refers to literary Tamil; icai is that division of Tamil literature which consists of verses set to music as distinct from poetry or drama. Naṭakam is dramatic literature. These three divisions constitute the muttamiḷ.

He who played upon the mirutaṅkam, knew all forms of dancing and singing, the musical notes, the pure Tamil modes of speech, the melody and the tāḷam, the harmony born of differentiated time-beats, as well as the flaws that might result from such manipulations, together with the use of different kinds of expressions (dēsikam). In playing upon his instruments, he knew how to combine correctly single beats, how to give time for double beats so as to be heard well, how to make both these kinds of beats melodiously merge with the notes of the lute and the flute, and also with the evenly drawn-out note of the vocal chords. With dexterity he could, wherever necessary, subdue the sound of his instrument, so that the other instruments might be properly heard; at times, he would also fitly drown them with the overpowering sound of his mirutaṅkam. (Such was the high degree of perfection which this master had reached).

The flutist was a master of the traditional rules of that art. He knew the two combinations known as *cittira*¹ and vaṇjaṇai,² whereby harsh syllables were softened and rendered sweet to the ear. He knew the four varttaṇas (involving fingering skill), and with his knowledge of the science of the pālai music (kural and iḷi)³, he adjusted himself to the sound produced by the muḷavu. He could play carefully enough to be in tune with the mirutaṅkam and the iḷi strains of the flute. He could observe the notes voiced by the singer and elaborate upon what he heard and at the same time keep himself within the limits of the tune.

1 The term cittira-p-puṇarppu is nasalizing the hard consonants in singing a musical piece (Tamil Lexicon, p. 141).

2 The term vaṇjaṇai-p-puṇarppu is nasalizing the soft consonants in singing.

3 Also Paṭṭatai as in vaṇṇap-paṭṭatai of the line 63,

He exhibited his grasp of melodies¹ by playing note by note so that each separate sound might faultlessly be heard.

Then there was the master of the lute of the fourteen strings. In order to produce the seven pālai notes he would conjointly sound the respective strings in the lute, known as the tāram, and the kural, and bringing them to the central part of the lute he would tune the kaikkiḷai part of the instrument. Similarly, touching the other stout string on the tāram side and the other two slender strings on the kural side and bringing them to the central part of the lute, he would tune the viḷari part of the instrument.

Then proceeding from uḷai, the most slender string, up to the kaikkiḷai, he would play upon all the fourteen strings and thus produce the ceṃpālai note. In a definite order the notes would arise, e.g. paṭumalaippālai from kaikkiḷai, sevvaḷippālai from tuttam, kōṭippālai from tāram, viḷarippālai from viḷari, mērcēmpālai from iḷi—thus are the combinations effected. In the lute, the notes become lower and lower as they pass over to the left (side of the instrument). It is just the opposite in the flute. The expert in the lute can mix the low and high and the middling notes with a pleasing effect.

The site for erecting the stage was also chosen in accordance with well-established traditions,² having regard to the nature of the soil. For purposes of the measure-

1 The technical terms are vārappāṭal and kūṭaippāṭal.

2 The reference to nūl in ll. 95-6 shows the authority of the śilpaśāstra which was then in vogue. According to Arumpata-vurai the reference is to dramatic works. This is not very convincing. The choice of the site and the fixing of the stage must follow the prescriptions of the śilpaśāstra only.

ment of the stage,¹ the kōl, which was a piece of bamboo growing in the sacred high hills, with the length of a span between every two of its joints, and with twenty-four thumb breadths, was the standard. The stage was eight kōls in length, seven kōls in breadth, and one kōl in height. It had two appropriate doors. The plank platform placed over it was four kōls in width. Over the stage were placed painted pictures (of the bhūtā)² for praise and worship. The graceful lamp illumining the stage was so placed that the pillars did not cast shadows.³ The single screen and the screen⁴ between the two pillars to the right of the stage, besides the overhanging curtain, were well manipulated by ropes. (Added to these) was the canopy painted⁵ with many beautiful pictures, from which were hanging loosely, garlands of pearl and others. Such was the novel and attractive appearance which the stage presented.

1 For a description of the stage see Suddhānandappirakaṣa quoted by Pandit Swaminatha Aiyar, Sila., pp. 114-5, n. The two doors were intended one for entrance and the other for exit.

2 This statement shows that the institution of varṇāśrama had already come to stay in the Tamil land. The names of the deities or būtas worshipped are Vacciraṭēkaṇ, Vacciraṭantaṇ, Varuṇaṇ and Iraṭṭakēcvaraṇ (Cila., p. 115, n. Cf. Cīvaka-cintamani, st. 672). Further details as to the clothing, food, etc., of these four būtas are seen in 'Alarpaṭukātai', ll. 2. ff. and ll. 110 ff.

3 This shows a highly advanced state of engineering skill.

4 In the Cīvaka-cintamani these three kinds of screens (eḷiṇi) are mentioned (st. 675, comm.). See also Maṇi, canto v, l. 3. Eḷiṇi is evidently the same as yavanika.

5 Portrait painting was not unknown in the early centuries of the Christian era. Cf. Maṇi., canto xviii, l. 46.

The talaikkōl, or the staff,¹ was the central shaft of a splendid white umbrella captured in the battle-field from monarchs of great repute. It was covered over by purest jāmbūnada gold,² its joints bedecked with nine gems. This staff represented Jayanta, Indra's son, and as such was worshipped in the palace of the protecting king of the white umbrella (the Cōla),

On the day³ on which this staff was to be used by the dancing-girl, she had to bathe it with holy waters, brought in a golden pitcher, and afterwards to garland it. Then it was handed over with a blessing to the State elephant already adorned with a plate of gold and other ornaments on its forehead. To the accompaniment of the drum proclaiming victory, and other musical instruments, the king and his five groups of advisers⁴ were to circumambulate the chariot and the elephant and give the talaikkōl to the musician-poet on the top of the chariot. Then they went round the town in a procession, and entering the theatre they placed the talaikkōl in its appointed position.

1 ll. 1:4-5 are repeated in a slightly altered form in canto xxviii, ll. 98-9 of this work.

2 Four varieties of gold are distinguished, of which the jāmbūnada is the purest variety.

3 Aṭiyārkunallār, acting on the authority of Mativāṇaṇār, speaks of the following as the auspicious days: Pūṛaṣam, Kartikai, Pūṣam, Baraṇi, Rēvati, Tiruvatirai, Aviṭṭam, Cittirai, Viṣakam, and Makam. The raṣis appropriate to these are Riṣabha, Simha, Tulam, Kaṭakam, Vṛccikam, and Mituuam. It must be noted that there is no warrant in the text for such astronomical data.

4 The term aimperumkūlu has been interpreted in different ways. See S. K. Aiyangar, Hindu Administrative Institutions in South India, 1931, p. 18; K. A. Nilakanta Sastri, The Pāṇṭyan Kingdom, pp. 32-3; also Dikshitar, Hindu Administrative Institutions, pp. 161-2; Studies in Tamil Literature and History, p. 204.

After this the instrument-players occupied their allotted seats.¹ The dancing-girl (Mātavi) placed her right foot² forward, and stepping in, stayed by the side of the pillar on the right, according to the ancient custom. Likewise her older assistants who followed the old custom gathered themselves by the side of the pillar on the left. The two kinds of prayer (vāram) were sung in turn so that virtue might increase and vice might disappear. At the close of the prayer all the musical instruments held by the respective players were sounded.³ The lute was in tune with the flute, and the mirutaṅkam with the lute. The resounding note was in tune with the mirutaṅkam, and the āmanti-rikai with the sound of the pot.⁴ Each was in perfect harmony with the other. Two beats made one maṇṭilam, and eleven such maṇṭilams were executed in conformity with the established theatrical practice. When this musical act, called antarakkoṭṭu, was over, the auspicious pālaippan was sung without the slightest violence to its rigid measure.

The four parts⁵ of the auspicious song were suitably introduced. Beginning with three maṇṭilams (or ottus) it

1 The allotment of the places was according to the prescription of the Sāstra which Aṭiyārkkunallār styles as nūl, from which he quotes the mode of arrangement on the stage. (See p. 118).

2 Placing the right foot in the first entrance any new place or building is considered to be auspicious even today in India.

3 For a similar expression see Maṇi., canto vii, l. 45.

4 For a similar order for playing on musical instruments see Civakacintāmaṇi, st. 124 and 675, comm. See also Iraiyāṇār Akapporul, sūtra 40, comm.

5 The names of these four are ukkiram, tūruvai, ābhōgam, and pirakalai. Cila., p. 75.

ended with one ottu (ēkatālam); with this captivating maṇṭilam the dēsi dance came to an end.

Mātavi also danced the vaṭuku dance.¹ Then it appeared as if the five-beat-mode of each of the two styles of dancing, dēsi and vaṭuku, was concentrated in one style—so captivating was her dance. In her quick movement she looked like a golden creeper animated with life. Because her dance was perfect and scientifically correct,² the king who protected the world, in due recognition, presented her with a green leaf-garland and one thousand and eight *kaḷaṅcus*³ of gold, which was the customary present given to dancers who held the talaikkōl and exhibited their talents for the first time.

Fawn-eyed Mātavi⁴ handed over a garland to a hunch-backed woman, and asked her to stand out in the street

1 In the vaṭuku style of dancing she began with maṭṭāttālam, and ended with ēkatālam (single time-beat). Cila, p. 76.

2 Nāṭṭiya-Naṇṇūl is apparently a treatise dealing with tāṇṭavam, nirutyam, and nāṭyam, something like the Bharatanāṭyaśāstra in Sanskrit, now being published in the Baroda Sanskrit Series.

3 Kaḷaṅcu-poṇ was an ancient coin of Tamil land. The term Kaḷaṅcu often occurs in Tamil inscriptions, and means sometimes a coin and sometimes gold bullion of the proper standard of weight and fineness. (See An. Rep. Ep., 1912, p. 65 and op. cit., 1916, p. 116). 'In an early Pāṇṭya inscription (No. 90 of 1908) it occurs as the equivalent of the Sanskrit Kṛiṣṇakācha, and Mr. H. W. Codrington of the Ceylon Civil Service informs me that in that island a coin of the kaḷaṅcu weight was called kāhapāṇa. No. 197 of appendix B gives kaḷaṅcu as the equivalent of niṣka.' Thus writes the epigraphist, op. cit., p. 106.

4 From the expression namkōṭi in l. 166 it would be more appropriate if the words in ll. 164-6 were spoken by Mātavi's mother; but the commentators attribute them to Mātavi herself.

where the rich citizens of the city passed to and fro, as if she was offering it¹ for sale, and to announce that 'this garland is worth a sum of 1008 kaḷaṅcus of very excellent gold. He who buys this garland becomes the husband of our creeper-like lady'. The garland representing the large lotus-eyed Mātavi was purchased by Kōvalaṇ, and, accompanied by the hunchback, he entered Mātavi's bridal chamber, and as he embraced her he was captivated so much by her charms that he forgot himself and did not like to part from her. In sooth, he forgot his own unsullied home and wife.

VEṆPĀ

With golden bangles, Mātavi of Pūmpukār exhibited her skill on the dancing stage by word of mouth, in respect of numbers and letters, five iyals four paṇs, and eleven kinds of kūttus, making her reputation spread on the earth.

1 The garland was not worth 1008 kaḷaṅcus. But it was the symbol for Mātavi who was worth 1008 kaḷaṅcus and it was announced that whosoever wanted to take her as his partner should be prepared to pay so much gold.

CANTO IV

ANTIMALAIC CIRAPPUCCEYKATAI

OR

IN PRAISE OF THE EVENING

AT the time when Mother Earth, enrobed by the waters of the deep, felt afflicted exclaiming, 'I do not see the mighty lord (the Sun) who sent out his rays all over the world and ruled it with his unequalled single disk! Nor is it known where is the (prince) Moon who illumines the wide sky with his cool rays.' And when her four faces (the four directions) turned pale, her flower-eyes moist, and her whole form covered with dew like the chieftain, who occupies, with the aid of rebellious subjects, the kingdom of powerful kings during their absence, to the grief of loyal tax-paying subjects, Evening (the alien chief) made his triumphant entry into fertile old Pukār, to the grief of faithful wives left alone by their husbands, and to the delight of disloyal women enjoying the company of their secret lovers. It was then that the Kōvalar¹ sent forth from their flutes the mullai songs, the buzzing bee sucked the honey from the mullai flowers, the soft-footed southern breeze warded off the six-footed bee (kurumpu)² which had forced his way into unopened buds.

1 The term Kōvalar means Gōpālar or cowherds. They are a community belonging to the region of the mullai. The whole Tamil land was classified into five regions, namely marutam (river-bed), kuṛiñci (hill), neytal (littoral tracts), pālai (deserts), and mullai (forests).

2 The six-footed bee is referred to by the term kurumpu as it acts like the Kurumpar, a term which stands for petty chief.

and wafted the fragrance into the open street, and maidens with glittering bangles lit their shining lamps.

(At that time), in his capacity being the lineal ancestor¹ of the Pāṇṭyās, whose trait it was to turn back, in spite of their tender age, the invading enemy, the youthful crescent Moon appeared in the sky and drove away the annoying chieftain, Evening. Thus without losing his greatness, the silvery moon, the king of the stars, spread his milk-white brilliance all around.

Finding in her bedchamber, where the bed was strewn with home-grown mullai, fragrant jasmine and many other flowers, that the clothing on her waist had slipped and the coral girdle enveloping it had consequently become displaced, Mātavi, who was in a wistful mood, betook herself to the open moonlit terrace, and gave her lover alternate moments of union (kalavi)² and lovers' quarrel (pulavi), compromising Kōvalan then and there with a loving heart.

Besides Mātavi, there were others with lilylike eyes, who were sleeping blissfully on the breasts of their lovers, fanned by the soft breeze after exhausting themselves in voluptuous enjoyment. But first they put out the fumes tains. The Kuṟumpār were a marauding tribe who suddenly fell on the enemy's cattle and disturbed the peace and security of the land. In l. 24 of the same canto Evening is described as kuṟumpu, occurring as it does at the intervening time between the day and the night. (Cf. Kalittokai, st. 118, l. 8.) For the Kuṟumpār, see J. G. Frazer, Totemism and Exogamy, Vol. II, 1910, pp. 244 ff.

1 Tradition avers the Pāṇṭyās to be a branch of the ancient lunar race of kings. Compare this line with Puṟam., st. 58, l. 8, where the term paṇcavar occurs, more or less with the same attributes.

2 The terms kalavi and pulavi are technical terms in Tamil love literature. See the Tirukkuraḷ, ch. 131 and 133.

of incense made up by mixing the white *ayir*¹ of the western hills with the black akar of the eastern hills; they (still) wore the sandal-paste prepared by rubbing the sandalwood of the southern mountains² upon the sandstone of the northern hills;³ and they also wore green paṭalai garlands interspersed with segments of tender lotus stalk, the lotus flower, the blue flower, and the kaḷunir in addition to pearl necklaces, which having slipped lay in mixed confusion on the flowery bed together with particles of fine powders.

But Kaṇṇaki⁴ was sad at heart. Her anklet was no more on her charming feet; the girdle no longer graced her soft waist-cloth; her breasts were no more painted with vermilion paste: no jewel other than her sacred tāli did she wear; no ear-rings were visible on her ears; no perspiration adorned her shining moon-like face; nor was there collyrium on her long fish-like eyes; no more was there the tilaka on her beaming forehead; her milk-white teeth were not revealed to Kōvalaṇ in a loving smile; nor was her dark hair softened by oil.

1 According to Aṭiyārkunallār ayir is sugar-candy which was exported to India from the Yavana country. But ayir seems to be a fragrant substance white in colour.

2 The Potiyil Hill noted for sandalwood (Sans., candanācala).

3 The Tirupati Hills, the northern limit of Tamiḷakam; the term vāṅkēlvāṭṭam occurs in the Neṭunalvāṭai, l. 51 and the Akam, st. 340. According to some, the northern mountains may refer to the Himalayas. This is unconvincing as the Himalayas are not noted for sandstone. Even today visitors to Tirupati purchase stones on which sandal-paste is prepared.

4 These ten lines describe the conduct of a chaste lady who is separated from her husband. In l. 50, the term maṅkalavaṇi is undoubtedly a reference to the tāli or the māṅkalyasūtram.

(Nor was Kaṇṇaki alone in her sorry plight). Owing to their separation from their dear lords, other ladies who breathed heavily as bellows, abandoned the bedchamber¹ which they used during the hot season for that with narrow windows, which they used during the cold weather. They were sad that their breasts could not be decked with sandal-paste or with strings of pearls. They did not go near the bed of cool flowers plucked from flower-pots and watery fields. They could no longer repose on beds which were made of the soft down shed by the swan when it was pairing with its loving mate. These unhappy women, who once, unperturbed, in *ūṭal*² (lovers' quarrel) with their loving husbands rolled their eyes between the bridges of their noses and the tips of their ears, were now in despair. Their long eyes, red with weeping, dropped pearl-like tears because of their loneliness.

(At such a time) with the swan's soft tread for her gentle gait, with the sweet-smelling and honey-hiding āmpal flower for her fragrance, with the blooming lotus for her rosy lips, with the black sand for her wavy hair, the ladylike³ lake with the nōṭiṇam melody of bard-bees opened her eyes, which were the fair kuvaḷai flowers, when the birds and fowls sent out from time to time their shrill and loud notes, as if they beat the drum and

1 Mention of five beds in the Civakacintāmaṇi, st. 838.

2 Ūṭal is a term of much significance in Tamil love literature. (See the Tirukkural, ch. 133. Cf. pulavi.)

3 The lake is compared to a lady. The blossoming kuvaḷai flowers in the lake are the lady's eyes which, as their petals open in the morning, represent the lady's awakening. The ancient custom was for members of a noble family to be roused by the singing of auspicious songs. In the allegory this is represented by the bees' humming round the lotuses, blew the conch, till the dawn expelled the darkness of the night from the city which resembled the expansive sea.

One would say that in these watches of the dark night (pakal)¹ the fish-bannered prince (Cupid), going from place to place armed with his sugar-cane bow and flower-arrow, stood excellent guard over the city.

சுருதி மீட்டி மீட்டி மீட்டி மீட்டி மீட்டி

¹ Note the peculiar use of the term pakal meaning midnight. Cf. Maturaikkāñci, l. 653; Puram., st. 189, l. 3.

CANTO V

INTIRAVILA VURETUTTAKATAI

OR

THE CELEBRATION OF INDRA'S FESTIVAL

THE Sun appeared over the top of the Utaya hill, removed the cover of darkness by spreading its shining rays to illumine the vast earth which erstwhile looked like a melancholy maiden, with the sea of waves for her robes, the hills for breasts, the large rivers for garlands and the clouds for flowing locks of hair.

The Sun shone over the open terraces,¹ over the warehouses near the harbours,² and over the turrets with air-holes³ looking like the eyes of deer. In different places of Pukār the onlooker's attention was arrested by the sight of the abodes of Yavanas⁴ whose prosperity was never on the wane. On the harbour were to be seen sailors come from distant lands,⁵ but for all appearance they lived as one community. In the streets of the city hawkers went about with paints, bathing powders and cool

1 For a similar description of ll. 7-58, see Maṇi., canto xxviii, ll. 29-68.

2 This testifies to the existence of foreign trade on a large scale.

3 It may be noted here that the lattice windows were a characteristic feature of ancient houses.

4 Aṭiyārkunallār interprets it as milēcchas. To the ancient Hindus all foreigners were miīēcchas.

5 Men of different nationalities engaged in maritime commercial ventures were seen in the city.

pastes, flowers, incense and fragrant scents. In certain places weavers were seen dealing in fine fabrics made of silk, fur and cotton.¹ Whole streets were full of silks, corals, sandal and myrrh, besides a wealth of rare ornaments, perfect pearls, gems and gold, which were beyond reckoning.

There were also other streets where grain-dealers lived who kept their grains in separate heaps.² Washer-men, makers of muffins, wine-sellers, fishermen selling fish, dealers in white salt, those who sold betel leaves, those who dealt in scents, mutton-vendors, oil-mongers, meat-vendors, dealers in bronze, manufacturers of copper, carpenters, strong-armed blacksmiths, sculptors, potters, goldsmiths, jewellers, tailors, cobblers, skilled workers of all sorts who made fancy trinkets of pieces of cloth and cork, great musicians³ who knew the whole technique of 1 Besides cotton and silk, it may be noted that the hair of the rat was used for weaving clothes. But rats have no hairs and therefore the reference cannot be to the hair of Indian rats. These weavers were known as Kārukas.

2 Generally the different varieties of grains were classified into eight kinds and sometimes into eighteen kinds. The eight varieties are paddy, grass, varaku tīrai (little millet), śāmai (common millet), iṇṇku (great millet or black cōlam), tōrai (paddy grown in the hilly tracts), and ragi.

3 The term in the text is perumpāṇ as against the expression Cirupāṇ. The first is a group of experts who could play with ease on superior instruments like the pēriyāl, and the latter are a group of minstrels who occupied a lower status, and who were skilled in playing smaller instruments like the cīriyāl. Belonging to these two groups, we have the Perumpāṇārruppaṭai, and the Sirupāṇārruppaṭai, two works under the category of the Pattuppāṭtu.

musical science¹ and could exhibit their faultless skill on flute and lute by sounding the seven notes; and finally the lower class of artists who excelled in several minor arts, had their respective localities. All these places in the city went by the name of maruvūrppākkam.

In another part of the city there were the king's street,² the car street with flying flags, the bazaar street, the broad highway where highborn merchants lived on either side in the turreted houses, the Brahmana street,³ the streets of physicians and astrologers⁴ respectively, and of agricultural communities, and the broad street having the residences of those who dexterously bored holes in gems and pearls and mounted them, and of those who polished the shells and the conches that were worn as ornaments. There were also separate quarters where dwelt sūtas and māgadhas,⁵ religious dancers, astronomers,⁶ mock-dancers, prostitutes, actresses,⁷ maidens bearing flowers and betels, maid-servants,⁸ bagpipe musicians, drummers, of different sorts, buffoons and jesters.

1 This may be interpreted also 'who had inherited their skill from their forefathers'.

2 See Maṇi., canto iv, ll. 37-8. The Rājamārga of Sanskrit literature.

3 It is interesting to see that the term maraiyōr is interpreted by the commentators as pāñcagrāmins. In the light of the terms bhūtagrāma and indriyagrāma in Sanskrit literature, this term may refer to Brahmans who perform austerities by self-control.

4 See Maṇi., canto ii, l. 29.

5 Cf. Kauṭaliya Arthaśāstra, Bk. X, ch. iii.

6 Maṇi., canto vii, l. 65.

7 ibid., canto xx, l. 30.

8 ibid., canto xxiv, l. 19.

In an extensive open space, on the outskirts of the city, were quarters occupied by cavalymen with swift horses, elephant warriors, charioteers with lofty chariots and infantrymen with fearsome looks. This region was further celebrated by the presence of highly renowned great men. It went by the name of paṭṭinappākkam.

The central part of the city between the two divisions (maruvūrppākkam and paṭṭinappākkam) was open and looked like the battlefield where the armies of two great monarchs could meet. Underneath the dense rows of trees were erected permanent booths and stalls. That was the market-place (nāṭṭāṅkāṭi)¹ where the din and bustle of sellers and buyers could be heard throughout the day.

On the day on which the moon approached the cittirai star in the month cittirai (i.e. on the full-moon day) the sacrifice of boiled grains, sweetened sesame balls, meat mixed with rice, flowers, incense, and toddy was offered by the elderly (maṇava) maidens; in fascinating dress, and as if devoid of shame at the altar in front of the guardian deity² who had arrived in obedience to the orders of the Lord of the Dēvas, to ward off the evil which might befall the victorious king (Mucukunda),³ they then enjoyed

1 The nāṭṭāṅkāṭi is literally a day-market. It was situated in the central portion of the city, between the maruvūrppākkam and the paṭṭinappākkam, the two broad divisions of the city.

2 For the work of the Būta, etc., see canto vi, ll. 7 ff following, and the commentary thereon.

3 For a different version of the story see the Bhāgavata Purāṇa. Mucukunda is one of the three sons of Māndhātā and Bindumati. His brothers are Purukutsa and Ambariṣa (Bhāga. Pur., Bk. IX, ch. 6, st. 38). Hearing that Kālayavana, or simply Yavana, was carrying destruction to the Dēvas, Mucukunda themselves in the *tunaikai*¹ and kuravai as if possessed with divinity and left the place with the loud prayer 'May the king of the land and all this vast kingdom not be troubled by hunger, disease or enmity but enjoy seasonal rains and prosperity'.

The valiant warriors residing in the suburbs (maruvūrppākkam) and the leaders of the army quartered in the city (paṭṭinappākkam), vied with one another in going first to the great altar to make the asseveration 'May all evil to our mighty king be warded off, and may you (the Būtam) stand firm on the side of those who propitiate you with offerings!' Stone-slingers, and different classes of soldiers who held shields stained with blood and human flesh, as well as lances, patted themselves on their shoulders, shouting exultingly, and cut off their dark-haired heads containing such fierce red eyes as seemed to burn those upon whom they looked, and willingly offered them upon the sacrificial altar (of the guardian deity) with the prayer that the conquering king might be ever victorious, when those headless trunks seemed to speak through the drums of untanned leather these words of thunder: 'We have given you our lives as a sacrifice: Accept them.'² entered the cave, the residence of Yavana, and slew him, to the wonder of the Dēvas. Indra offered him a place of honour in heaven. But Mucukunda wanted to go on sleeping in that cave undisturbed for an unlimited period. Kṛṣṇa met him and blessed him as a yōgin, (ibid., Bk. X, ch. 51). He undertook penance in the Badari āsrāma.

1 The term tunaikai, otherwise known as ṣiṅki (see Dīvākaram., st. 9) is the dance in which the dancers rested their hands on their hips. In the kuravai they grasped each other's hands in a circle.

2 The reference is to talai-pali, a very ancient custom prevalent in South India, bearing strong evidence to the early forms

Once Tirumāvaḷavan¹ felt that there was no foe on either side² fit to fight with him and thinking, in his thirst for war, that there might be foes in the north, he had an auspicious day³ chosen for taking out his sword, umbrella⁴ and war-drum,⁵ and he prayed to his guardian deity that he might be lucky enough to find an enemy fit to encounter his broad shoulders, and advanced in that direction. Finding the great Himalayas, the residence of gods, as the barrier arresting his further progress, he retreated with pride after engraving his tiger-emblem on its rocky side.

On his return, the king of the great Vacciranāṭu⁶ whose sway extended as far as the roaring sea (in the east), gave of Śakti worship. This is corroborated by the Pallava architecture. (See the interesting article, 'The Head offering to the Goddess in Pallava Architecture', of Dr. J. Ph. Vogel in the Bulletin of the School of Oriental Studies, London, Vol. VI, Pt. II, 1931.) See also the Kalaimagaḷ, Vol. I, pp. 416 ff., where Prof. K. A. Nilakanta Sastri translates the above contribution, and ibid., pp. 802 ff., where again Pandit M. Raghava Aiyangar re-examines it in the light of literature.

1 Tirumāvaḷavan is the name of Karikāl-Peruvaḷattān, who was actuated by imperialism and lust of conquest.

2 Perhaps the Cēra and the Pāṇṭya kings. Cf. the closing lines of canto i, and the footnote.

3 Cf. Vāṇāṭ-kōṭal, (Pu. Por., veṇbā 'Vāñji', st. 4).

4 Cf. Kuṭaināṭ-kōṭal, ibid., st. 3.

5 Muracunāṭ-kōṭal, Puram., st. 50 n.

6 Vajranāṭu on the banks of the river Sōṇai (Son). Its king held the status of an udāsina or neutral of the Arthaśāstra literature. We are not able to locate this country definitely. Perhaps it is the region where the tribe Vajjis of the Jātakas lived. This was on the northern shores of the Ganges opposite to Magadha (Tam., Magada). See S. B. L. Cowell, Jātakas, Vol. VI, p. 120.

him a pearl canopy as tribute while the king of Magadha¹ famous for his sword-play, and his enemy a while ago, presented to him an audience-hall² (paṭṭimaṇṭapam). The king of Avanti gave him a friendly present of a tall and beautiful arch on the gateway. Though all these were made to gold and gems, their technique was not known to human artists even of exceptional skill; they were long ago given to the ancestors of these three monarchs by the divine Maya in return for some valuable service rendered to him. When they were all placed together, they formed an artistic maṇṭapam much praised by great men.

(In addition to this) there was the open space (velliṭai-manṭam) where could be found many bundles of goods with marks indicative of the quantity,³ weight and names of their new owners. Since there was neither gate nor lock nor watchman guarding them, thieves might sometimes be tempted to remove these bundles on their heads. And if they did so, the invisible deity guarding the place would make the thief go round and round the open plain, with the heavy burden on his head but would not permit him to pass away from there. The very thought of stealing anything made people quake with fear.⁴

1 The king of Magadha was the ari or enemy.

2 For paṭṭimaṇṭapam, see Maṇi., canto i, ll. 60-1. The hall where learned men assembled and held discourse. (See Tiruvācakam, paṭṭimaṇṭapam ērrinai ērrinai, 'satakam' 49.) Nacelnārkkiniyar holds the view that it was more an assembly of Sanskrit pandits. See Tolk., Porul., sūtra 490 comm.

3 The use of pictographic writing reminds us of South India's intercourse with Egypt on the one hand and the Indus Valley on the other.

4 One of the references to superstitious belief of the times. See also ll. 133-7.

Next, there was the place (ilañcimanram) with the miraculous lake by bathing in and circumambulating which all hunchbacks and cripples, the dumb, the deaf and lepers were cured of their infirmities and gained health and grace of form.

Then there was the open space where stood the tall shining stone (neṭumkalniṇṇamanram), by the worship of and going round which were cured all those who had grown mad by being deceived (into consuming drugs), those who were suffering from palsy as a result of poison, those bitten by sharp-toothed venomous serpents and those who were possessed by devils with protruding eyes.

There was again the meeting-place of four roads (būtacatukkam) where stood the Būta, proclaiming in a voice loud enough to be heard as far as four *kāvatams*¹ that he would bind with his rope and devour by thrashing the wicked who assumed the garb of asceticism to cover their sins,² cunning wives who practised vice in secret, intriguing ministers, men who coveted other men's wives, and witnesses who gave false evidence, and tale-bearers.

Further there was the place (pāvaimanram) where stood the statue which would never open its mouth but would weep by shedding tears on every occasion when there was a deviation from the path of justice by the king, or when partiality was shown in his court of justice by wrong interpretation of the law.

1 The municipal limits of the city of Pukār seem to have been ten miles in circumference. The topographical description of ancient Pukār approximates to the modern city of Madras. A kāvatam or kātam refers to a distance of two and a half miles.

2 Six kinds of heinous offences are mentioned here. It may be noted in passing that the Kautaliya Arthasāstra prescribes heavy punishments in the case of pseudo-sannyāsins, false witnesses, adulterers, etc.

Sacrifice was offered in all the five aforementioned places¹ held in veneration by men of wisdom who knew the real truth about them.

Then the auspicious drum was removed from the temple called Vaccirakkōṭṭam,² placed on the nape of the elephant adorned with the girdle, and conveyed to the temple where the young white elephant stood.³ This was indicative of the beginning and the end of Indra's festival. After this the auspicious tall flag (bearing the ensign of the white elephant) which stood in the temple of the Kalpaka (tarunilaikkōṭṭam) tree was hoisted aloft in the sky.

On the verandas of the big mansions⁴ were to be seen artistic planks set with emeralds and diamonds whereon stood coral pillars. At the entrance of these mansions were suspended ornamental hangings having the shape of the makara fish from whose teeth (horns), carved with symbols representing auspicious things and adorned with kimpuri, hung strings of pearls in series. The streets were further beautified by golden pitchers filled with water, glittering pālikai vessels, lamps wrought in the shape of 1 As many as five maṅgrams are mentioned here.

2 See Maṇi, canto i, ll. 27-8. (Sans., Vajrakōṣṭa.)

3 The temple of the Airāvata, Indra's elephant.

4 For a similar celebration of Indra's festival see Viramitrōdaya, pp. 425-33; Mhb., 'Ādi.', ch. 64. For the origin of the Indra cult in Rīg Vēdic India, see A. C. Das, Rīg Vedic Culture, 1925, pp. 56 ff. It would appear from the Viṣṇu Purāṇa (Pt. V, ch. 10), that the ancient cowherd communities celebrated Indra's festival, and this was discontinued from the time of Kṛiṣṇa who wanted the Gōpas to take to the worship of cattle and mountains which alone afforded them food and occupation. A festival of Indra is referred to as being celebrated by King Sālavāhana and his subjects in the Kālakācārya Kathā (see W. Norman Brown's The Story of Kālaka, 1933, p. 83).

maidens,¹ golden flags, pure white feather fans, fragrant pastes and many other ornamentations.

There were assembled in these streets the five great groups of the king's councillors (aimperumkuḷu)² and the eight great bodies of the king's retinue (eṇpērāyam),³ princes of the blood royal, sons of the merchant aristocracy, fast riders on horseback, groups of elephant riders, and charioteers whose chariots were drawn by horses, for the glorification of their highly reputed ruler's sway over this wide world. One thousand and eight kings bore on their heads gold pots filled with cool and holy water rendered fragrant by floating pollen of flowers of the Kāvēri, taken from where it joins the sea, and performed the bathing ceremony of the Lord of Gods, to the delight of the earth and the admiration of heaven.

Joy prevailed everywhere on account of Indra's festival in the temple of the great Lord who was never born (Śiva), in the temple of the six-faced red Lord (Subrahmanya), in the temple of Vāliyōn (Baladēva)⁴ whose complexion was like the white conch-shell, in the temple of Neṭṭiyōn (Viṣṇu) of the dark colour, and in the temple of Indra of the victorious umbrella and the pearl garland.

1 Cf. Maṇi., canto i, l. 45.

2 For aimperumkuḷu see Maṇi., canto i, l. 17; Tolk, 'Kīḷavi', sūtra 57; Naccinārkkinīyar's commentary; minister, purōhita, commander, ambassador, and spy.

3 For a twofold interpretation of the term eṇpērāyam, see Dikshitar, Studies in Tamil Literature and History, pp. 204-5.

4 The temple of Baladēva is mentioned, besides that of Indra. In later days these two cults have become extinct. See R. G. Bhandarkar's Valshnavism, Saivism, pp. 3, 9, 11; also M. Raghava Aiyangar, Āḷvārkalānilai, p. 7. See also p. 50 supra.

On one side the Vēdic sacrifices,¹ as ordained by Brahmā, were faultlessly performed, and on another the festivals pertaining to the four classes of Dēvas² and the eighteen Gaṇas³ and different other gods, were separately and correctly conducted. Inside the city were the Jaina temples and other Dharma institutions;⁴ outside were Śrīkōil⁵ and other sacred establishments. The Purāṇa reciters⁶ also discharged their duties in another place. Elsewhere, the king's victorious chariot, with its banners flying, was taken out gracefully to annihilate the enemy-kings and others. In another place rose high immeasurable melodies produced by the flute, the drum, expert players on the yāl and the human voice of the Pāṇar.⁷ Thus in that vast city, every lane and 1 This shows the popularity of the Vēdic sacrifices.

2 The four classes are Vasus, Divākaras, Rudras and Maruts; all of them are Vēdic deities. In reality tradition speaks of thirty-three classes of Gods—the eight Vasus, twelve Adityas (Divākara), eleven Rudras, and the two Maruts.

3 One classification of the eighteen groups runs as follows: apsaras (?) nāgas, siddhās, gandharvas, vidyādhars, piśācas, tarakas bōga-būmiyar, kimpuruṣas. śēnas, asūras, butas, munis, dēvas, garuḍas, rākṣasas, yakṣas and cāranars.

4 This may refer to the Jaina or the Buddhist institutions or even to those of the orthodox religion. But the term paḷli shows that there was a school of dissenting sects, especially the Jaina.

5 This is not necessarily a reference to the temple of Lakṣhmī.

6 The reading of the Purāṇas in the public places so as to be heard by all classes was a feature of ancient days. Cf. Harṣacarita where the Vāyu Purāṇa is said to have been read in public for the benefit of the masses.

7 The Pāṇar were a class of minstrels and masters of music.

by-lane were alive with the sound of the drum by night and day.

Because she had not been separated from her lover, Mātavi, wearing beautifully serrated ear-rings, had not lost her charms. Mingled with the united fragrance of the mātavi flower,¹ the home-grown mullai, jasmine, the mayilai flower, the pot-grown blue-lotus, and the red kaḷunīr,² and pleased with love's delight, seeking sport in the pleasure garden made fragrant by the lovable flower-buds, entering into the fresh aroma of flowers in the ever-mirthful market-place³ caressing the frankincense and the ever-wet sandal-paste, and continuously indulging in the joyous lovers' speech and laughter, the mountain breeze roamed about the city accompanied by the iḷi-sounding bee and by the mild rays of early summer, in the same way that Kōvalaṇ went about accompanied by minstrels singing the kural tune and by his city-companions skilled in love affairs.

One such companion spoke of his sweetheart: 'Has the moon who roams in the beautiful sky become afraid of its enemy, the serpent Rāhu,⁴ and left the sky to appear here in your disguise by carrying a heavy cloud on its head, parting with the little hare, and painting on its face the figures of two fishes (in the place of the two eyes) with the kumīla flower (the nose) between them?'

1 This can also be interpreted thus: 'The red mātavi flower did not become the bud that people love, but grew into a beautifully bent root without losing its redness'.

2 A categorical list of fragrant flowers which would increase sensuous desire.

3 Here a full description of the nāḷaṅkāṭi is furnished.

4 Rāhu devouring the moon, says the legend, causes lunar eclipses, and devouring the sun, solar eclipses.

A second said : 'Does the flash of lightning nurtured with great care by Cupid of the fish-flag (whose body was burnt by the spark of Śiva's third eye),¹ intend to come down here and regain it by drinking the cool nectar drops of the moon?'

A third said : 'Has the honeyed lotus, in the course of searching for its companion (Lakṣhmī), transformed itself into two dark kuvaḷai flowers, one on each side of the kumīḷa blossom? Or has it blossomed again into the red ilavam and into jasmine to proclaim that it is in this flourishing city that the goddess Lakṣhmī² has entered so that the monarch of the wide world may greatly prosper?'

Yet another said : 'Is the god of the devouring mouth (Yama), who destroys all and who, in fear of the righteous king, gave up the duty imposed on him and changed his male form for that of a girl, with a smiling countenance and covered with bashfulness, speaking words as soft as the notes of the pleasing yāl?'

With such frivolous talk the broad-shouldered lovers gained victory over their sweethearts, chaste as Arundati, who looked like a great army of the bodiless god (Cupid), and prevented them from running away from their presence by closely clasping them in voluptuous embrace and (thereby) smearing their chests all over with the sandal solution which adorned the breasts of these women. By thus giving them the pleasure of their union,

1 The reference is to Śiva burning the God of Love. For a full description of the legend, see Matsya Purāṇa, ch. 154, 194 and 245.

2 The term used in the text is ulvarikkōlam. A classic example is that of the Pāṇḍavas in disguise in Virāṭanagara. See below, canto vii, l. 89, Aṭiyārkunallār's comm.

they made their wives' lotus eyes lose the colour of the kuvalai and gain instead a reddish tinge (indicative of sleeplessness). The people of the city in a state of helplessness and tremor, spoke to themselves, 'If our great feast can do nothing to remove the redness from the eyes of our women-folk, is there any medicine at all that can cure this in the wide earth?'

It was then the middle day of the festival in honour of the King of Gods (Indra).¹ The dark left eye of Kaṇṇaki and the red right eye of Mātavi throbbed and were filled with tears of sorrow and of joy respectively like the kaḷunīr flower which shakes when the sweet pollen inside it emits honey and loses its external colour.

1 In the prehistoric days of Tamil India it appears that a certain Cōla monarch, by name Tuṅkaiyilerinta-toṭittōṭ-cempiyaṇ, introduced Indra's festival to be celebrated annually in his capital city Pūmpukār. The duration of the festival was twenty-eight days. The festival continued to be celebrated by succeeding monarchs, as it came to be thought that by not celebrating it, the Catukkabūtam, engaged on the orders of Indra to check sin and sinners, would leave the city thus leading it to desolation and ruin. (See Maṇi., canto i, 'Vilāvaraikatai'.) Years rolled by and Neṭumuṭikkiḷi became the monarch. Once when he was spending some time in the royal park, a certain beautiful girl presented herself before him, and at his desire, lived with him as his wife. One day she suddenly disappeared, and when the King was aimlessly inquiring of passers-by, a certain Cāraṇa informed him that she was Piliṭalai, daughter of Vaḷalvāṇaṇ, King of the Nākaṇāḍu and that she would return no more, but would send her son. The ship in which the son was sent foundered, and moved by great grief the King failed to celebrate Indra's festival for the year. On this Maṇimēkalai the deity cursed that the city be swallowed by the sea. It so happened, and Aravana-Aṭikaḷ with his disciples left for Vaṇci (ibid, cantos xxiv-vi).

CANTO VI
KATALATU KATAI
OR SEA BATHING

ONCE a Vidyādhara hero celebrated, along with his lady-love of the long fish-like eyes, a feast in honour of the god of love in the extensive, fragrant and flowery grove in a Cēḍi¹ on the slopes of the silver-peaked Kailāsa.² He then realized that that was the day³ when Indra's festival would commence in the flourishing city of Pukār (Campāpati) in South India, and he said to his wife, 'We shall go and witness the place where the great Būtam eats the sacrifice offered to it (in commemoration of its) having carried out Indra's orders to ward off the evil effects of the arrows aimed by hosts of swift-going Asuras against the terror-stricken but best of men, the victorious king Mucukunda,⁴ while he was keeping watch, tiger-like over Indra's city.⁵

1 The Cēḍi is the city of the Vidyādhara according to Jaina literature. Cf. Cīvaka-cintāmaṇi, p. 170, st. 546-(2).

2 The Kailāsa Hills were the abode of the celestial Gaṇa, by name the Vidyādhara, among others. Cf. Matsya Purāṇa, ch. 154.

3 The commentator says the same day next month.

4 Tiruntuvēlaṇṇal occurring in the text is a reference to Mucukunda, once the King of the Cōlas.

5 This city is known as Amarāvati in Sanskrit literature,

‘We shall also see the five famous assembly-halls¹ of unrivalled architectural beauty, given by Indra in gratitude and refitted on the earth by the monarch’s ancestor who once kept guard over Amarāvati.²

‘(Agastya) finding that Nārada³ did not play on the vīṇa properly, or appropriately, to the song of the dancing Urvaśī before the thousand-eyed Indra⁴, or to the song of her accompanist (tōriyamaṭantai) who sang in the vāram which did not enrapture his ear, laid a curse, “Let the lute lose its charm, and let this dancer be born on the earth.” In the line of that Urvaśī was born Mātavi with her hood like alkul. (In Pukār) we shall witness her dance.

‘My dear coral-mouthed, slender-waisted girl, we shall there worship Indra, the lord of gods’. So saying, he started showing his lady-love the many-crested Himalayas,⁵ the ever-flowing Ganges, the city of Ujjain,⁶ the Vindhya forests, the Tirupati hills,⁷ and the

1 Five great maṇrams are mentioned here.

2 There is a Tamil tradition that the ancient Cōla monarch Mucukunda went to help Indra when Amarāvati was besieged by the Asuras.

3 Nārada, the divine music master, and author of Sīkṣa, a musical treatise of the orthodox school. Because he did not play properly on the lute, the sage Agastya cursed his instrument.

4 This is similar to the Sanskrit term śahasrākṣa.

5 The geographical data are furnished. The Kailāsa Hills are on the Himalayan slopes. The way to Pukār lay through the Ganges, Ujjain, the Vindhya, the Tirupati hills, and the Kāvēri tracts.

6 Ujjain is an ancient city much celebrated in Sanskrit literature.

7 Vēṅkatam, or the Tirupati hills, is celebrated in ancient Tamil literature of the Caṅkam age. The Ālvārs refer to it, and Kāvēri tracts overburdened with crops, and finally reached Pukār, enveloped by flowery groves. He showed her also the city, after performing the worship of Indra in the prescribed manner, and then witnessed the celebration of the enjoyable festival in that ancient and affluent town.

Said he then (of his fair companion): 'My dear, thou wilt hear the *dēvapāṇi*¹ in honour of Viṣṇu, the four songs in honour of the four būtams worshipped respectively by the four castes, and the song in honour of the Moon roaming in the sky for the benefit of all. Afterwards thou wilt see: The koṭukoṭṭi,² danced by Siva, Umā keeping time on one side, on the burial-ground where Bārati (Kālī), danced with faultless rhythm and avoiding wrong time-measures, when the big fire-tipped arrow obeyed His command to burn the three cities (of the Asuras) at the request of the Dēvas;

'The *pāṇṭaranka*³ dance which Siva, in the form of Bārati,⁴ displayed before the four-faced Brahmā standing in His chariot;

Pēyālvār speaks of it as Tirumalai Iyarpati (63 and 75). See also Kamba-Rāmāyaṇa. Kiṣkinda, 'Nadavitta Paṭalam', st. 26-8.

1 Devapani is not a celestial song but a song sung in honour of the God. Dēvapāṇi is of two kinds: perumdēvapāṇi and śirudēvapāṇi.

2 Kotum-kotti is the original word according to Naccinārkiṇiyar. See Kali., 'Kaṭavuḷ'. For an actual description of the dance see canto xxviii, ll. 67-75. The translator has not been able to find parallels from the Sanskrit and other works corroborating all the eleven kinds of dancing mentioned here.

3 Pāṇḍaranka is again a dance attributed to Siva.

4 Barati-arangam, the place where Bārati (Sarasvatī) or Bāravi danced.

‘The *alliyam*¹ dance performed by the dark-hued Viṣṇu (añjanavaṇṇan) after disposing of the treacherous devices of Kamsa;²

‘The mallu dance performed (by the same deity) after the destruction of the Asura (Bāṇa);³

‘The tuṭi dance (of Subrahmaṇya) in the midst of the sea, which itself served as the dancing-hall, following the destruction of the demon Cūra⁴ who hid himself there;

‘The *kuṭai*⁵ (umbrella-dance) danced by (Subrahmaṇya) lowering the umbrella before the Asuras who gave up their arms in great distress ;

1 The alliya dance is said to be one among the ten dances engaged in by Kṛiṣṇa.

2 Kamsa, the uncle of Kṛiṣṇa, wanted to kill the latter by means of a number of villainous guiles. One of them was to send an Asura follower of his in the guise of an elephant by name Kuvalayāpiḍa. Kṛiṣṇa found it out, and killed him. See Bhāga Pur., Bk. X, ch. 43, st. 2-15. See also Viṣ. Pur., Bk. V, ch. 20.

3 Bāṇa was an Asura with a thousand arms. He was the son of Bali and Kōṭara. His capital was called Sōṇitapuram. He had a daughter Uṣā. Aniruddha, son of Pradyumna and grandson of Kṛiṣṇa, carried her away. Hence Bāṇa had him imprisoned. Kṛiṣṇa went to his grandson's rescue, and chopped off Bāṇa's thousand hands. See Bhāga. Pur., Bk. X, ch. 62 and 63. Cf. Cūṭamaṇi.

4. This refers to the legend of the killing of the Asura Cūra-patma by Subrahmaṇya. Even today this festival is celebrated in all Siva temples in connexion with what is known as Skandaśaṣṭi, the sixth day in the dark-half of the month of Kārtikai. For details of the legend see Kandapurāṇam, § Cūrapaṇmaṇvatai. The reference is to the ‘war-dance of triumph on the heaving wave-platform of the oceanic stage, to the accompaniment of the rattle of his drum (tuṭi)’.

5 It is not possible to trace this legend. To venture a conjecture, the reference is to the greatest victory of the baby

‘The kuṭam (pot-dance)¹ exhibited by Viṣṇu (of the world-measuring stride) after walking through the streets of Bāṇāsura’s extensive city ;

‘The *pēṭi*² danced by Kāma (Cupid) who changed his male form to that of an hermaphrodite ;

‘The marakkāl dance of Māyavaḷ (Durgā)³ when She could not stand the wily deeds of the cruel Asuras ;

Subrahmaṇya, six days old, over the great Tārakāsura and his satellites, a match for Viṣṇu, Indra and other Gods. See Matsya Purāṇa, ch. 160. It is said that Subrahmaṇya ‘screened his face with a parasol, and played in exultant derision the kuṭaikkūttu or the umbrella-dance’. This is sometimes performed during temple processions when ‘the God’s umbrella-bearer cuts some capers with his unwieldy parasol; but the kāvaṭikkūttu is a greater favourite in these days in Murūkaṇ’s worship and festivities.’ T. A. S. Vol. II, p. 185. Cf. Nighaṇṭu, 14th ed., p. 179. For the sculptured figures representing the two varieties called the kuṭaikkūttu and the kāvaṭikkūttu, see the two Yāli panels flanking the entrance of the sanctum of the Adbhuta-Nārāyaṇa temple at Tirukkaḍaittannam (Chenganachery Taluk). T.A.S., Vol. II. p. 187.

1 This variety of dancing also has no counterpart in the Sanskrit Nāṭya treatises. ‘Its origin has to be traced to the purely pastoral pursuits of its votaries, the shepherds, who eventually came to consider it as one of the three favourite dances of the God Viṣṇu in his special manifestation as Gopāla, the Divine Shepherd.’ The Vaiṣṇava Ālvārs refer to this (see Perīālvār Tirumōḷi, Nācciyār Tirumōḷi, etc.). It is popular even now in the uriyaṭi festival in commemoration of the sports of the baby Kṛishṇa. The reference in the text is to the occasion of the defeat of Bāṇāsura in his capital of Sōṇitapura (Sōṇagaram). Cf. the account in the Tiruvāraṅkakkalampakam.

2 For the pēṭi dance, see Maṇi., canto iii, l. 125.

3 Durgā is otherwise known as Mahisāsura-mardani. See also canto xii, ll. 65-6.

‘The pāvai dance¹ of Lakṣmī when the Asuras clad in warlike attire ceased (from battle);

‘And the kaṭayam dance² of lady Indrāṇī standing in the field on the northern gate (of Bāṇa’s city).

‘Thou wilt see, my dear, the above-named eleven dances and the songs appropriate to them, acted and sung by the respective dancers with suitable garments and gestures, and in erect as well as bending postures, according to the established conventions.

‘This is Mātavi, descended from the line of the great Mātavi mentioned by me when we were in the grove rich with the pollen of sweet flowers.’ Thus said the highly distinguished Vidyādara entranced by the whole prospect.

Kōvalaṇ, who was in the state of ūṭal (love-quarrel), was sorry to see the end of that Indra festival, which consisted of dancing in different kinds of attire, accompanied by the chiming of anklets, and which had been witnessed incognito by the denizens of Heaven.

To please him (so that his dejection might not gall him further), she (Mātavi) bathed her fragrant black hair, soft as flowers, till it shone, in the perfumed oil prepared by mixing up ten kinds of astringents, five spices, and thirty-two herbs soaked in water; she dried it in fuming incense, and perfumed the different plaits,³ with the thick paste of 1 See Maṇi., canto iii, ll. 116 f.

2 It is rather difficult to identify this incident. The Tamil name for Indrāṇī is Aylrāṇi.

3 One of the many references to show that five plaits of hair were generally worn by Tamil ladies, especially when they were young.

the musk-deer. She adorned her little feet, reddened by dye, by wearing choice rings (pili)¹ on her fair and slender toes, and on her ankles becoming ornaments known as pariyakam, nūpuram, pāṭakam, sataṅkai, and ariyakam.² She put ornaments on her rounded thighs. Over her waist was a girdle made of thirty-two strands of big pearls worn over a blue cloth embroidered with the figures of flowers. Round her upper arms she had armlets studded with pearls together with attractive bangles of precious stones (kāmar-kaṇṭikai). Round her soft-haired wrists were beautiful bracelets (cūṭagam) in which was set the costliest gem in front with diamonds all round, gold bangles, bangles of nine gems (pariyakam), conch bangles, and bangles of coral. On to her tiny fingers, red as the kāntal flower, so as to hide them, she slipped a ring bent into the shape of an open-mouthed fish, and a highly brilliant and lustrous ring of gems, and a round ring glittering with rubies and brilliant diamonds.³

Her delicate and beautiful neck was adorned with a chain necklace called nuṇṇoṭar, with a fine string of exquisite workmanship and with a garland. Added to these was a string of ornamental gems held by a clasp, which covered the small nape of her neck.⁴

1 Pill is in use even today, and it is considered inauspicious if it is not worn by a girl on her marriage. -

2 Here note the luxurious life led by the ancient Tamils. Some of the ornaments and finery are mentioned. These have been examined by S. Somasundara Desīkar in a contribution to Kaṭaimagaḷ, Vol. I, pp. 284-8.

3 This and the following lines show the number and variety of jewels and clothes in vogue in those ancient days. Some of them have now gone out of use.

4 Piṇṇāli is the term used by the Commentators in this connexion.

A pair of ear-rings, in which emeralds alternated with diamonds, glittered in her beautiful ears. In her dark tresses becoming head-ornaments such as daivavutti (also sidēvi), valampuri (also talaippālai, sea-conch), toyyakam and pullakam were set.¹ She (Mātavi) gave Kōvalan the happiness of union and of ūṭal, and stayed in her excellent nuptial chamber.

It was the full moon day in that ancient, awe-inspiring city. When she saw people in search of amusement hurrying to the beach, fragrant with the tālai, Mātavi became eager to follow them. At that time the swan uttered its cry from lotuses in the tanks; cocks sent out their clarion call betokening the approach of the dawn; Venus² shone on high, and darkness died away.

Kōvalan wore sparkling jewels on his garlanded chest, and like the prodigal cloud, mounted his mule, while the deer-eyed Mātavi got into her chariot (vaiyam).³ They passed through the bazaar street beautified by towering mansions in which rich merchandise was stored in a million bundles. Here the beautiful lamps were glittering and some were decked with flowers.

1 This is said to be a head ornament of two sections called tenpalli and vaṭapalli.

2 Tam., velli; Sans., sukra.

3 This vehicle may be kollāvaṇṭi, a cart drawn by bullocks, or kūṭarappaṇṭi, a cart with a hooded top. The editor of the text notes in this connexion that in the Malainātu (p 182), the vehicle is known as kōlārvaṇṭi. From this description of Kōvalan riding a mule, and Mātavi a vehicle drawn by bullocks, we have to infer that these were used by persons of rank in the early centuries of the Christian era. The use of horses for vehicles had not come into practice.

Maidens (tāsiyar) everywhere scattered flowers,¹ tender grass (aṛuku), and paddy, as being auspicious, and shone in their jewels. In this street² the Goddess Lakṣmī seemed to dwell, and on its two sides people were passing irregularly.

They then entered into the central highway of the city³ rich with the wealth of sea-borne goods and reached the cēri regions on the seashore where the flags on high seemed to say: 'In these stretches of white sand can be seen different kinds of goods brought in ships by foreign merchants, who have left their native homes and settled here.' There were burning the lamps of those who sold dyes, sandals, flowers, scents, and all varieties of sweets, the lamps of dexterous goldsmiths, the lamps of those who, sitting in a row, sold piṭṭu, the black broad lamps placed on lamp-stands by the sellers of muffins, the lamps in front of the miscellaneous shops of girl-vendors, the lamps of fishmongers glimmering here and there, beacon-lights erected to guide ships on the seashore,⁴ lamps taken out to sea by fishermen in their boats as they went a-fishing with nets, nightlong lights set up by foreigners⁵ speaking

1 The habit of ladies both in the evening and early morning. Whether Iṭaṅkō-Aṭikaḷ by the term tāsiyar means prostitutes, cannot be said.

2 A description of the bazaar and other streets in Pukār before daybreak.

3 This is maruvūrppākkam and the bazaar street was in paṭṭinappākkam.

4 This bears testimony to the existence of lighthouses and a large volume of trade by sea.

5 This testifies to the custom of lighting the streets. See Perumpāpā, ll. 349-51; Maṇi., canto i, l. 16; Puram., st. 60.

different languages, and finally the lamps lit by the watchmen of (the warehouses containing) valuable merchandise.

The illumination of all these lights which were beyond counting, was so great that the seashore¹ with its aloe hedges appeared more beautiful than the cultivated tracts with their fragrant lotus-ridges; even a small mustard-seed could be seen if it lay on the fine sands stretched out like fine flour.

Thither came creeper-like Mātavi with a group of her playmates. There lay in repose ships which were filled with countless legions of hill-produce and sea-produce.²

In one place on the seaside were grouped together princes and their retinue, as also merchant princes and their confidantes; there were again other groups of maidens skilled in dance and song, in curtained enclosures. Their multi-coloured clothes and many-sounding tongues³ resembled the uproar inevitable on the festive occasion when king Karikāla⁴, - whose great fame reached the celestial world, celebrated the first freshes in the Kāveri, and came to be mingled with the unceasing tumult caused

1 Here follows a fine description of the beach in the evening.

2 This again testifies to the rich sea-borne trade.

3 See Akam., st. 376.

4 Cila., canto vii, l. 4. This shows that some festivity was connected with the first freshes. It may be noted in passing that the Cōla king, Karikāla was the originator of the festival of the first freshes of the Kāveri. This is quite in keeping with the statement of the Paṭṭinappāl that he was the founder of the capital Kāveripaṭṭinam. Being Kāvirināṭan or the Lord of the Kāveri tracts, it is but natural that Karikāla was impelled by desire to institute a festival for the great service done by the river especially to the Cōla-dēśa. A modern relic of this ancient festival is by men and women of the four castes crowding on the narrow place where the great river Kāveri joined the sea.

In the midst of that tumult the long-eyed Mātavi, soft as a flower, took the pleasure-giving tuneful-stringed lute from the hands of the fatigued Vasantamāla. There, on a white-legged couch with a canopy of picturesque paintings,¹ surrounded by a screen set on the newly-spread sands in the shade of a punṇai tree standing in the wide expanse enclosed by the flowering kaitai which swept away the foulness of the (fish-smelling) sea, Mātavi enjoyed the company of Kōvalan.

what is known as the patineṭṭāmpērūkku, literally freshes on the 18th day of the month of Āṭi. It is a social function in which children, ladies and others take part. On the evening of that day, food of different kinds is taken to the riverside and after prayers to the river for its continual flow, the members of the family partake of the food. The children float old books, cadjan leaves, and sometimes manuscripts of rare books in the floods, and swim in the water and enjoy themselves in different ways.

1 Further evidence of the art of painting in the Tamilnāṭu.

CANTO VII
KANALVARI

OR THE SEASHORE SONG

Kaṭṭurai

AFTER worshipping with her hands Mātavi removed the lute faultless in respect of pattar,¹ kōṭu,² āṇi and strings, from its fancy-coverings, its body adorned with flowers, which looked like a beauteous bride with her black eyes darkened with collyrium. And she began to produce its eight different sounds, paṇṇal, parivaṭṭaṇai, ārāital, tai-varal, the majestic celavu, viḷaiyāṭṭu, kaiyūl, and the sweet kuṟumpōkku, in order to satisfy herself as to their correctness. Her lustrous little fingers ornamented with ruby rings manipulating the different strings resembled a hive of humming-bees. Next she tested by ear the eight different tunes,³ vārtal, vaṭittal, untal, uraḷtal, the fair urutṭal, teruṭṭal, aḷḷal, and the beautiful paṭṭaṭai. Passing the instrument to Kōvalan's outstretched hand, she said, 'It is not my object to command. Please let me know the tālam.' He too began playing odes to the Kāveri and

1 The Cīvakacintāmaṇi styles these four faults as diseases of the vīṇa (st. 1720).

2 Parimēlaḷakar speaks of these ḷal as pāṭaltoḷil (duties). Kuraḷ, st. 573, and Naccinārkkīṇiyar on the Cīvakacintāmaṇi (st. 657) speaks of them as kalaittoḷil. What these eight terms mean are explained in extenso by Arumpatavuraiāciriyaṛ.

3 See the commentary of Arumpatavuraiāciriyaṛ, also Poruṇar, l. 23, where four of these eight tunes are mentioned.

songs appropriate to the seashore (kāṇalvari)¹ to the great delight of Mātavi.

TO THE KAVERI²

‘Hail to thee, Kāvērī! Even if our Cōla king, whose garlanded parasol is as white as the moon, extends his righteous sceptre far and weds the Ganges,³ thou wilt not sulk. I have learnt, O fish-eyed one, that not sulking, even though he weds the Ganges, is the supreme virtue of chaste ladies. Hail to thee Kāvērī!

‘If our king, whose garlanded umbrella is white and stable, extends his unbending sceptre far, weds Kāṇṇī (Kanyākumari), O Kāvērī! thou wilt not sulk. Hail to thee! I have learnt that not sulking, fish-eyed Kāvērī, even if he weds Kanyākumari,⁴ is the mighty virtue of ever-chaste ladies. Live long, O Kāvērī!

‘Hail to thee, Kāvērī! Thou walkedst (flowed) along, listening to the songs of the ploughmen,⁵ the resonance of the sluices, the roar of the breaking waters, and the noise

1 Kaṭarkāṇal-varippāṇi is of two kinds: teyvamcutṭiya-varippāṭṭu and makkaḷaiccutṭiya-varippāṭṭu. Of these two the former consists of kūṭai-ceyyuḷ and vāracceyyuḷ.

2 Stanzas 2-4 go by the name of ārruvarl, literally an ode to a river.

3 The implication is that the Cōla king's sway, as has been already said, extended upto the Ganges tracts in the north.

4 The southern limit of the Cōla kingdom was Kanyākumari, the Cape Comorin of modern days.

5 This points to the fertility of the soil and testifies to the irrigational works on the Kāvērī tracts. Cf. Paṭṭinappālai, II. 277-91; also A.S.S.I., Vol. IV, p. 204 ff. ‘The Leyden Grant’.

of the festive crowd celebrating thy freshes.¹ All this flow of thine, along with the din of merrymaking, is expressive of the prosperity of our king, who possesses soldiers with unbridled tongues. Hail to thee, Kāvērī!

Again²

‘How can we innocent people understand, sir, that unrighteous men again and again show the sea-god³ to our lady with long eyes like dark flowers, and make pious vows only to be broken. Our city is Pukār where the water-lily opens its blossoms at the sight of white conch bracelets and pearls, mistaking them for the moon and constellation of stars which spread their white rays.

‘How can we know, sir, of those lovers, who approach us on this beach from behind, with presents in their hands, and then turn out to be, strangers expecting us to beg of them? Our home is Pukār where the bee is bewildered, unable to distinguish the (blue) eyes of maidens from two blue flowers blooming in the reflection of the moon (on the waters).

1 The first freshes of the year in the Kāvērī were the occasion of a carnival in which all classes of people from the king down to the peasant took a leading part. Tamil tradition is that Karikāla was the originator of this festival. See p. 129, supra.

2 Stanzas 5-7 are a glowing description of the richness and simplicity of the city of Pukār. These words are spoken by the heroine's maid to her mistress's lover, who has come with a present in his hand. The theme (turai) of these stanzas is said to be varaivu-kaṭāyavai. The idea is that the maid pretends to refuse presents and seems to insist on a regular marriage.

3 The sea-god described is Varuṇa. According to Sanskrit tradition he is the Lord of all waters, and figures prominently in the Vedic pantheon.

‘Our city, sir, is Pukār where the sounding conch is buffeted by the big dashing waves and is driven ashore and ruins our maidens’ sand-castles,¹ These maidens, the flowers in whose hair are loosened and sway about, grow angry, and plucking the water-lilies from their garlands with tender fingers they throw them at the conch. Passers-by seeing these (flowers scattered on the ground) think they are observing eyes.’

Again

‘To wipe out the appearance of the ploughed sands in which the conches lay buried, the heavily-flowering punnai had scattered its pollen-laden flowers on that sea-shore. The straight fish-shaped eyes in her full-moon face have caused love sickness incurable by medicine, but curable by the lady’s soft and yellow-spotted breasts.²

‘Pretending³ to drive away the birds hovering around the foul-smelling dried fish on the beach, a maid holds in her hands fragrant jasmine from a young plant, with swarms of bees roaming about her. She is a goddess who dwells there in the sweet-smelling grove of flowers. Had I known of the existence of this goddess⁴ there, I would not have come.

‘In the open yard before fishermen’s huts where their nets are dried, Death,⁵ assuming the form of a maiden with

1 One of the pastimes of the girls in the littoral tracts.

2 This stanza suggests that this is the only medicine for curing lovesickness. These words are spoken by the lover’s companion who sees signs of love in the heroine, Cf. infra st. 45.

3 This and the following stanza go by the name of kānal-vari.

4 The goddess is the lady-love herself.

5 For a description of Death in a maiden’s guise, see Tiruk-kuraḷ, st. 1083, and Kaḷittokai, st. 56, l. 9.

long lance-like eyes, dwells on the foreshore where the waves beat the sands. There, with a wreath of flowers in her hand, she guards the fish dried for sale. 'Had I known that she was here, I would not have come at all.' (So said the lover.)

Again¹

'Behold! This is the moon, this perfected picture of the face in which eyes have been painted like fish, brows like a bow and curls of hair like clouds in which Cupid's power is revealed. O tell me, has the moon left the wide sky in fear of the serpent (Rāhu)² and sought shelter in this little hamlet where fishermen dwell?

'Behold! Her eyes resembling a blood-stained lance³ glance from side to side, to view the conch-shells cast on the shore. They are fierce Death. Has fierce Death assumed the form of a graceful young damsel, and come to live in this little village on the seashore?

'Behold! This is the goddess who drives away birds from where the fish are spread to dry and who causes dire sickness to those who gaze at her. Has that goddess come to the cool seaside thick with hare-leaf (aṭumpu) in the form of a damsel with five plaits of hair?'⁴

1 Stanzas 11-13 are put in the mouth of the lover who, on seeing his lady-love in front of him, rapturously breaks forth into description of her.

2 Rāhu is an evil planet like Kētu. Legend has it that Rāhu has only a head, while Kētu has only a body and possesses no face. Both are supposed to cause eclipses according to the mythical account transmitted by the Purāṇas.

3 Red in the eyes of ladies is a sign of their youthful love. Hence the eye is compared to a blood-stained lance. The eye here stands for the person possessing such eyes.

4 Another reference to the hair being dressed in five plaits.

Again¹

'The fragrant flowers of this grove, the fresh sweet smell of these spreading sands, the faultless words of this damsel, her big youthful breasts, her face resembling the full moon, her bow-like curved brows, and her lightning waist that baffles the painter's brush;² it is these that have caused distress to me.

'This open seashore with its dashing billows, this stretch of shining sand, these flowers that send forth their sweet scents, this pleasant thick grove the fragrance-spreading tresses, this face like the moon, and this pair of carp-like eyes; all these have caused distress to me.

'This beach where shells are scattered in heaps, this fine grove which charges the air with its fragrance, these flowers that scatter their soft petals, these haunts where she moves about alone, her young teeth which look like new-sprouting shoots (from the soil), her face that vies with the full moon, and her two youthful breasts; it is these that have caused distress to me.'

Again³

'Your elder brothers go out into the sea and live by killing living things (fish); you, on the other hand, enter into my body and live by killing me. Pray do not lose your slender waist which is in danger of being

1 Stanzas 14-16 are put into the mouth of the hero as addressing his comrade.

2 Another reference to show that the art of painting had been developed to a large extent in the second century A.D.

3 Stanzas 17-19 are the words of the hero addressing the heroine.

overwhelmed by the weight of your beauteous and well-moulded breasts.¹

'Your father kills the living things (of the sea by catching them) in the cruel meshes of his net.² You, on the other hand, kill lives by catching them in the net of your long eyes. Pray do not lose your lightning-like waist, which is at the point of breaking, owing to the weight of your breasts decked with pearl-strings.

'By means of swift boats, your elder brothers kill lives (fish). You kill lives with your curved brows. Your fame consists in witnessing the distress you cause in others. Pray do not lose your slender waist which faints under the weight of your breasts!'³

Again⁴

'The red eyes of the damsel who holds the coral pestle in her hand and pounds the white pearls in the mortar,⁵ the red eyes of her who pounds white pearls are not lilies, for, O, they are so cruel!

'The red eyes of the damsel who walks the walk of a swan in the shade of the punnai where the waves dash

1 The term miṭal in the text means literally 'of abounding strength.'

2 The eyes and the waist of the lady are compared respectively to the meshes of a net and to lightning.

3 In these three stanzas 17-19 the hero makes a passionate appeal to the heroine to yield and to subject him to no more uncertainty.

4 Stanzas 20-23 are put into the mouth of the hero's companion when he hears his words of passion.

5 See below, canto xxix, 'Vallaippattu', l. 6. The coral pestle and the pearl powders seem to confirm that the city was noted for abundant pearls and coral.

against the foul-smelling shore, the red eyes of her who walks the walk of a swan are frightful; verily they are death, death!

'The red eyes of the damsel who holds honey-laden violet in her hand and scares away the birds that hover around the dried fish, the red eyes of her who scares away the birds are not innocent darts; verily they are so cruel, cruel!'

Again

'O foolish swan! Do not go near her, do not go; your gait cannot rival hers. O foolish swan! do not go near her, do not go; your gait cannot rival hers. O foolish swan! do not approach her, who roams about stirring the waters of the sea as the waves fall one after another (on the shore), for your gait cannot rival hers. Do not go.'

The Narrative

At that time, Mātavi of the long beautiful eyes, who listened to the sea-song (of Kōvalan), feeling that his song was indicative of a change of attitude on his part, took the lute from him pretending that she was pleased though (really) sulking. Then she began to play, purposefully, an ode to the sea so fine that the goddess Earth¹ wondered at her skill; and all people were in ecstasy when they heard her sweet voice appropriately accompanying the notes of the lute.

TO THE KĀVĒRI²

'Hail to thee, Kāvēri! clothing thyself in a garb of fair flowers where bees cluster murmuring their songs, thou

1 A relic of the primitive concept of calling the Earth Mother and Goddess.

2 Stanzas 25-27 go by the name of ārruvari or a kind of ancient song to the river. Here the righteous rule of the Cola walkedst along with swaying steps, with carp-like dark eyes. All this walk of thine, with thy carp-like dark eyes, is, I know, due to thy husband's righteous sceptre which does not deviate from the right path.¹ Hail to thee, Kāvēri!

‘Hail to thee, Kāvēri! When thou movedst along and thy lovely garland swayed, the peacock strutted along the flowery grove, and the koel sent forth its mirthful notes; I have learnt that this walk, with thy lovely garland moving, is attributable to the might of thy husband's frightful lance. Hail to thee, Kāvēri!

‘As a mother tends her babe so thou wilt not cease from everlasting help to the fertile country of him (our king) who is prosperous to the end of all time. This enduring help which thou renderest unceasingly is attributable to the grace of our king of the solar race, who, with his wheel of righteousness, confers protection on all.² Hail to thee, Kāvēri!’

TO PUKĀR

‘O sir, you come every day, like the God of love,³ and ask us to receive pearls, which are no match for the bright king and the fertility of his kingdom are in evidence, the latter mostly due to the Kāvēri. Thus we find that the glorification of the Kāvēri is an important theme in all early Tamil poetry in general and of the Silappatikāram in particular.

1 These are the primary duties of a righteous monarch. The Sanskrit term pālanam or paripālanam connotes the idea that protection of subjects is the chief duty of a king. See, for example, Rāmāyaṇa, Bk. II, ch. 106, st. 19.

2 This may also refer to the impartiality of the king.

3 The theme of stanzas 28-30 is the glory of Pukār, the quondam capital of the Coḷas.

teeth shining between the coral lips of our lady whose face is like the full moon. Our city is Pukār where the surging ocean, like a dealer, exchanges lustrous pearls for wreaths of flowers.

‘Sir, these bracelets of the fair-armed ladies, the damsels of sturdy fishermen, make known (by becoming loose)¹ that they have been married in secret.² We are innocent. How can we understand all this? Our city is Pukār where the water-lily, with the murmuring bee inside, blossoms at the sight of the swan resting in the midst of the flower-laden branches of the long punnai, imagining them to be the full moon and stars.

‘How can we know, sir, in these regions where wine overcomes the consumer while the consumption cannot be concealed, the fact that you cause sickness, incurable by any medicine, to ladies? Our city is Pukār where, when the waves destroy the houses of sand, sharp javelin-like eyes³ in their full-moon faces shed tears of sorrow. Then gathering handfuls of sand we throw them against the waves imagining that the sea will be filled up.

Again

‘Although he saw⁴ the male crab with the female crab and saw me also in this fair park thick with its clusters of 1 See in this connexion Kalittokai, ‘Kuriñci,’ st. 17, ll. 8-11.

2 It is a reference to the kaḷavu system of marriage. The term marai in the text is significant.

3 The idea here is that waves rise like sharp javelins as if to meet the moon in the sky and dash against the sporting-ground of these fisher-maids. Thinking foolishly that they could arrest the progress of the waters, they throw sand into the deep as if to fill up the sea.

4 Stanza 31 describes the feelings of the heroine and shows her inability to gauge the love of her lord.

flowers, the lord of the maritime tract, taking leave of his senses, deserted us of the five plaits. O girl with curly hair, I do not know his reason.

'Has¹ he taken with him his sympathy and his horse-chariot, and gone without thinking of us? O fair-blossomed hare-leaf creepers! O swans! Let him abandon us. Yet shall we not forget him who has forgotten us.

'O neytal flower laden with honey like my weeping eyes at the distressing nightfall, thou feelest no trouble but dost sleep. In thy dreams dost thou see my hard-hearted (lover) as he approaches this seaside?

'When he dashed along with the speed of birds in his chariot drawn by horses, thou ruinedst the route wherever he went (his path), O clear waters of the sea. What can I do, O clear waters of the sea? Thou hast become at one with those who are spreading scandal around me here. What shall I do? Thou dost not know my woes.

'O waves! The ruts caused by the passing of the strong, big chariot of my perfect lover! were ruined. O cool grove! O swan, sporting with thy mate! O wet shore! Will not you all tell my lover that (his deed) is not just?

'Bless you, O waves! You destroyed the ruts caused by the wheels of my perfect lover's strong, big chariot. You destroyed the ruts on the way. At the same time you pretended to be a friend of mine. Hail, you waves! You are no friend.'

1 Stanzas 32-36 represent the lament of the heroine at the neglect and indifference of her lover. She aimlessly addresses the hare-leaf, the neytal flower, the waves, the grove, and the swan.

Again¹

‘O lord of the sea, whose waves dash as far as the paddy fields, enrobed in beautiful corals and decked with excellent ornaments made of well-formed pearls! The fresh wounds caused in the punnai park by the shafts of Cupid, who owns the flag of the makara fish, cover her body and make her unrecognizable; but if her mother sees her thus, what shall I do?

‘O lord of the maritime tract, whose waves, smiling with their pearl-like teeth and opening their coral lips, spread over the courtyard where the fishermen’s nets are (left for drying), what shall I do if her mother, seeing that this innocent damsel has changed her colour to that of the pīra flower that blossoms during winter, consults the deity² and finds out who did this cruel act?

‘O lord of the maritime tract, whose waves move about to destroy the fishy smell of the beach and penetrate the cool grove spreading it with the fragrance of different fallen flowers,³ my lady suffers mental anguish but the cause of her illness is not known. If this unknown disease is detected by her mother who will be pained at it, what shall I do?’

1 Stanzas 37-39 have for their theme the varaivu-kaṭāviya-avai. These are the words of the maid who is afraid of the discovery of signs of love in her mistress by the latter’s mother. Anxious to see her wedded the maid thus addresses the lover.

2 This points to the custom of consulting deities to rectify wrongs when ever trouble occurs.

3 The reference is to old and withered flowers that have fallen down from the tree.

Again¹

‘The evening darkness has spread everywhere. The Day-maker (the sun) has disappeared. My eyes shed tears of sorrow from which it is impossible to recover. O fair one whose locks of hair are decked with open-petalled flowers! Is this maddening, fiery twilight, which loosens my bangles,² found in the country of the deserter?’

‘The sun has disappeared. Thick darkness has spread everywhere. Collyrium-eyes, that look like opening flowers, shed tears of sorrow. O fair one whose face looks like the young moon! Is this maddening twilight, which comes vomiting the moon and devouring the sun,³ found in that country to which he has gone?’

‘The birds have stopped singing. The Lord of the Day has disappeared. These long eyes suffer from the pain of shedding unceasing tears. O fair one whose tresses contain blossoming flower-buds! Is this maddening twilight which attacks my life,⁴ found in the country of the deserter?’

Again⁵

‘Someone came to the kaitai fence through the swamps (near the sea) and spoiled our sport. He who went away

1 Stanzas 40-42 represent [the distress of the heroine at eventide when she thinks of the country in which her lover has tarried. She addresses her maid.

2 The idea is that maidens feel the separation of their lovers keenly when night sets in, so that their bodies grow thin and their bangles hang loose.

3 The idea is that the sun has set and the moon has risen.

4 The heroine considers evening her cruel enemy.

5 Stanzas 43-45 are again the words of the maid to her lady. In Tamil love poetry the maid sometimes identifies herself so.

spoiling our sport, would not leave my love-stricken mind.

‘Through the swamps, fenced by the park, close to the sea, someone came and stood before us saying “Make me pleased”. He who stood before us saying “Make me pleased” could not be excluded from our deer-like glances.

‘Seeing the swan playing with its mate, one stood looking on all yesterday. He, who stood looking on yesterday, would not leave (our minds) even as the gold-tinted moles¹ cannot leave our body.’

*Also*²

‘Come not here, O crane! Come not near our park. Come not here, O crane, come not near our park; for you will not speak of my present love-sickness to my lord of the maritime tract. Come not, O crane! Do not approach our park.’

Also

Singing thus in the mode in which Kōvalan had sung, the beautiful damsel (Mātavi) again exhibited with her rosy little fingers the charm of the *cevvaḷippālai*³ in which closely with the heroine that she speaks for the heroine. Here is an open declaration of her abiding faith in the lover who has deserted her, as she thinks, for the time being only. Alternatively these stanzas may be interpreted in another way. The first two lines of each of these three stanzas can be taken as the words of the maid and the next two lines as the words of the heroine in reply.

1 ‘Yellow spreading spots on the body of women, regarded as beautiful’—Tamil Lexicon.

2 This address to the crane in stanza 45 represents the lament of the lovesick heroine.

3 ‘A secondary melody-type of the pālai class’—Tamil Lexicon.

the *kaikkilai*¹ was joined with kural. She sang in suitable strains a new melody-type (paṇ).

Again²

‘O evening, during that charming *vilarippālai*³ peculiar to the residents of the maritime tract, you made *iḷi*⁴ blended with kiḷai (kaikkiḷai). O evening, even as you made iḷi join with kiḷai, you are able to take away my life. Please yourself. May you live long!

‘O evening, you go to take away the life of people who live dolefully seeking solace in the greatly comforting parting-words of their separated lovers. If you thus besiege them, O evening, you will be the invading king from outside besieging the fortress of the enemy-king⁵. Is it not so?

‘O maddening twilight, you came with the setting of the Lord of the Day, augmenting my distress, when the world began to close its eyes. If you are the maddening twilight, and if he be my wedded lord, the world has

1 ‘Poem in five viruttam verses of unreciprocated love’—ibid. This song shows that her love is one-sided and not reciprocated by the other party.

2 The three stanzas 48-50 represent the passionate outburst of the heroine at the approach of the evening. Cf. stanzas 40-2 supra.

3 Vilari is a descending musical scale.

4 Iḷi is the pañcamasvaram and the sixth kaikkiḷai is its inimical string. Instead of playing on the iḷi string the fingers automatically went to the enemy-string at that time, due to illusion of the mind.

5 The reference is to the uḷṇaitṭai and the noccittṭai, and represents the monarch outside forcing an entry into the fortress and the defending king inside. (See Tolk. ‘Poruḷ.’, sūtra 65.)

'become impoverished indeed.¹ Bless thee, maddening twilight!'

Again²

'O god of the sea, we worship your lotus-feet. At this cruel maddening, fiery twilight, our lover departed, without considering the effects of his vow made in this flowery park, with words removing all our mental pain. Please forgive his false vow.'

Hearing this, Kōvalan said, 'I sang the kāṇalvarī; but she, the cunning one combining several deceitful lies, sang with her mind upon someone else.' Prompted by Fate which made the music of the lute its pretext,³ he slowly withdrew his hands from the embrace of his full-moon-faced lady-love, and said 'Since the day has come to a close, we shall make a move'. But she did not get up at once. After Kōvalan had gone away with his retinue of servants, Mātavi rose up, and silencing the group of maids who were making a noise in the grove filled with the pollen of flowers, she betook herself home, getting into her carriage, with a sad heart, unaccompanied by her lover, and saying,

1 She believes that everybody in the world must feel alike at nightfall.

2 The lover has been separated for a long time. Knowing secretly that he had returned and was waiting for an opportunity to meet the heroine, the maid addresses the god of the sea so as to be heard by the lover.

3 Here the author introduces the theory of prarabdhakarma, that the effects of our actions in a previous birth have to run their course, do what we will.

'May the garlanded white parasol of Cembayan (Cōla king), who with his fiery sword and his elephant with an ornamental plate on its face makes all the princes of this vast world bow their heads, bring under its shadow the entire Cakravāḷa¹ mountain!'

¹ A mythical range of mountains encircling the orb of the earth.

CANTO VIII
VENIR KATAI

OR THE ADVENT OF SUMMER

THE celebrated king Māraṇ (Cupid) with his delightful friend Spring held sway over the fertile Tamil country, bounded in the north by the Tirupati hills¹ sacred to Viṣṇu, and in the south by the Kumari sea,² having for its capitals high-towered Madura, Uṛantai³ of great renown, awe-inspiring Vañci, and Pukār with its resounding waters. This approach of (Spring) was heralded by the ambassador, the South Wind, hailing from the fertile Potiyil hill sacred to the revered saint (Agastya). As if to announce the herald's message, 'Put on your garb, O ye regiments of the fish-bannered prince, befitting your respective ranks,' the cuckoo, living in a grove rich in creepers, acted as the young trumpeter of Cupid's army⁴ and sounded his note.

1 The northern and southern limits of the Tamil country are furnished here. Once there was a river by name the Kumari, near the place which is now known as Cape Comorin. It has been swallowed by the sea. That the sea eroded into the interior as far as the river Pahrūḷi is evident from this canto, ll. 18-20 and corroborated by the Iraiyaṇār Akapporuḷ.

2 The Kumari sea is compared to a young lady decked with bangles. It is to be noted here that the two-capitals of the Cōlas are mentioned.

3 The Cōla Perunarkilḷi was the king at this time at Uṛantai. Pukār was only the quondam capital.

4 Māraṇ, the God of Love, had for his fourfold army the four capitals of the Tamil land, for his ally the Spring, for his Māṭavi of the long flower-like eyes who had returned alone, after her love-quarrel with Kōvalaṇ at the pleasure-park filled with open buds on the seashore, betook herself to her summer-retreat in a lofty upper story reaching the sky. That beautifully adorned damsel decorated the expanse of her breasts which were already smeared with kunkumum, with pearls of the southern sea and sandal-paste of the southern hills. These were the unexceptional tributes appropriate to the season¹ which she offered with her own hands.

Taking the spotless lute in her grasp she began to sing a sweet song and fell into a languor which she overcame by assuming the padmāsanam posture in the nine series of postures (viruttis).²

With her right hand on the bend of the viṇa in the attitude of the patāhai and with her left hand in that part of the instrument known as the māṭakam, she produced by the skill of her technique the notes cempakai, ārppu, kūṭam, and atirvu, avoiding discords.³ She thus played the series of fourteen tunes in the traditional mode, beginning with uḷai and ending with kaikkiḷai carefully scrutinizing the respective notes of the strings known as iṇai,⁴ ambassador the South Wind and as his royal herald, blowing the trumpet, the koel or cuckoo.

1 This shows that different kinds of fragrant pastes were used by lovers according to the season.

2 Virutti is also known by another term, iruppu, explained by Aṭiyārkunallār from dramatic and other treatises. See Perumkatai, 'Narumatai', ll. 44-8.

3 Cf. Civakacintāmaṇi st. 716-9, comm.

4 The second string.

kiḷai,¹ *pakai*² and naṭpu.³ In this way she sang with judgement to the accompaniment of the iḷi string.

Later, in the same order, she sounded the fifth and the seventh strings beginning and ending with uḷai, and afterwards commencing and ending with kural. She tested her skill in the four modes of akanilai-marutam,⁴ puṇanilai-marutam, marukiyal-marutam, and perukiyal-marutam,⁵ keeping an eye upon the three srutis high, level and low, and then began the tirappan born of the above-mentioned tunes. Soon she who looked like a flower-creeper was overcome by languor when she set her mind to play the tune called vēṇirpāṇi.

She took up a garland formed by tying together cam-paka, mādavi, tamāla, white jasmine, fragrant roots, and choice petals of the red lily intertwined with the white bent flowers of the ripe screw pine. On this she wrote, under the influence of Cupid who, single-handed, exercises his righteous sceptre over the vast world with his flower-arrows, and who is worshipped by the whole earth unexcepted, taking in her hand the long stalk of a flower and dipping it in the writing paste made of red lac and agar,⁶ as follows:—

- 1 The fifth string.
- 2 The sixth and the third strings.
- 3 The fourth string.
- 4 This and the following two are supposed to have sixteen strings.
- 5 This has thirty-two strings. The above are the four great classes of paṇ which is a melody-tape.
- 6 It is interesting to note the nature of the writing materials used for love letters.

‘He who has come to rule the world is the youthful prince,¹ Spring, who brings together the lovers and their chosen ones. The moon who has risen with the love-anguish that shows itself in the evening, also is not faultless. Therefore whether they be lovers who had had union and departed and were delayed in coming back, or whether they be lovers who had deserted and forgotten their mates, that this moon should kill the lonely poor ones with his sharp darts of fragrant flowers should be no cause for surprise. Please understand this.’

Thus evidencing her excessive love wrote Mājavī, sallow-complexioned and well acquainted with the sixty-four arts² when her sweet tongue expressed in musical paṇ and tīram, the tender tone of a lisping child. She then called aloud her maid Vasantamālā, on that pensive evening, and asked her to inform Kōvalan of all that had been written on the flower-garland and to bring him to her. Receiving the garland, Vasantamālā of the lance-like long eyes went to Kōvalan living in the quarter where grain was stored, and handed it over to him.

Then Kōvalan refused to receive the message saying:

‘The *kaṇkūṭuvari*³ performed by the loving maiden having tilaka on her forehead, curls of hair adorned with flowers, small black eyebrows, kuvaṭai-like eyes casting love glances, kumiḷ-like nose, kovvai-like lips,

1 The implication is that Spring being a youthful prince cannot rule fairly and well.

2 Cf. Vātsyāyana's Kāmasūtra where the names of the sixty-four arts are given.

3 One of the eight vari; a kind of dancing or, more appropriately, gesture. It seems to have been a custom in ancient times for the dancing-girls to take to vari as distinguished from the kuravai in which housewives took the leading part. This literally

‘The *kāṇvari*¹ dance of the black long-eyed dancer, who moved backward and forward by coming and going, with a moon-like face which seemed to groan under the weight of rain-bearing clouds of hair, whose eyes frisked about like carps, and whose bewitching smile exposed pearl-white teeth from within her coral-coloured sweet lips,

‘The dance of Disguise (*uḷvari*²), performed by the dancer whose piercing eyes were as sharp as a spear and who noticed the poverty of my heart after my separation from her owing to a lover’s quarrel, and being lonely appeared at the approach of eventide in the guise of her maid cheered me up with words as sweet as those of the parrot, with steps as entrancing as those of a swan, and with grace as ravishing as that of the peacock,

‘The minor dance *puṇavari*³ which, drunk with passion, she, whose slender waist could bear no ornaments, danced, in front (of the house) to the tinkling of foot-ornaments and jingling waist-band (not embracing me) though she knew that I was pining for her,

‘The dance of *kiḷarvari*⁴ performed by her who had a beautiful forehead, garlanded locks of hair, forelocks adorned with petals, a string of pearls, and beauteous breasts means the first view of the heroine by the hero. See Tamil Lexicon, p. 184.

1 Dance performed at frequent and repeated intervals.

2 This was to disguise one’s own form. An example of living incognito is that of the Pāṇṭavas in the city of Virāṭa king.

3 Dance where the heroine coldly neglects her lover’s company.

4 ‘Posture assumed by an offended lover or love, when an intermediary tries to conciliate’—Tamil Lexicon, p. 938.

causing distress to her waist and who appeared languid with her sleek tresses devoid of all sheen after purposely misconstruing the message I sent to her through her maid-servant expressing my love for her,

‘The *tērcivari*¹ performed by her when reflecting and reflecting on her sufferings caused by my separation and by her unbearable love towards me, she expressed to my numerous relatives,

‘The *kāṭcivari*² which she performed when she wore the garland with bees buzzing on it and spoke about her distress to all onlookers,

‘And the *eṭuttukkōḷvari*³ which she danced one following the other, seeing which, those upon whom she fell in a swoon comforted her after bringing her to her senses,

‘All these dances, my dear girl bedecked with jewels, are quite natural to her because she is only a dancing-girl.’

Thus when he refused to accept the garland sent by the bejewelled Mātavi, with the message written on the white tālai flowers of the screw-pine, Vasantamālā was sorrow-stricken at heart and wasted no time in returning to tell her mistress adorned with a flower garland, what had happened. Mātavi of the long flower-like eyes, said in reply: ‘Fair lady, if he does not come this night, we will see him at least tomorrow morning’ and sat down with a heavy heart on the couch spread with flowers, sleepless.

1 ‘A dramatic action in which a person expresses in detail all his sufferings to his relatives’—Tamil Lexicon, p. 2060.

2 ‘Dance exhibiting sorrow and distress’—ibid., p. 848.

3 ‘Theatrical action of swooning in extreme anguish in order to be lifted up’—ibid., p. 515.

VENPĀ

When¹ the Spring came and the red lotus opened its petals, the tender leaves of the sweet mango tree hung down, and the beautiful asōka blossomed. O, what mental suffering has to be endured by our lady of the good spear-like eyes!

When the cuckoo proclaimed 'O ye that quarrelled with your lovers,² it is the command of Cupid that you must love one another' (Vasantamālā remembered what she had said to Kōvalan). 'O you who enjoyed her sweet words in the seaside park, enjoy now these sweet words written on tender flowers by her who has been embraced by the Spring.'

1 Soliloquy of the hunch-backed Vasantamālā in taking the ōla (message) from her mistress.

2 This is what is known as ūṭaḷ. See Kaḷittokai, st. 92, l. 61. It was a kind of 'love quarrel between the husband and wife, arising from jealousy, peculiar to the agricultural tracts, one of five uripporuḷ'.

CANTO IX

KANATTIRAMURAITTA KATAI

OR

THE TALE OF THE DREAM

IN the evening when the sun disappeared, ladies with creeper-like waists sprinkled¹ lustrous buds of mullai flowers, just blossoming, and paddy grains in their houses in the big city; they lit their jewelled lamps and attired themselves in a manner appropriate to the night.²

One day long ago, Mālati fed her co-wife's child with milk; but the milk choked the child who hiccoughed and died. Being in a panic that her husband the Brahman and her co-wife would throw the blame upon her and would not accept the truth, Mālati took the dead child in her arms and went to the temple where stood the divine kalpaka tree (amarartarukkōṭṭam),³ to the temple of the white elephant (veḷyāṇaikkōṭṭam)⁴ to the temple of the beautiful white god (veḷḷainārkōṭṭam),⁵ to the temple of the Sun who rises in the east (uccikkiḷāṇkōṭṭam), to the temple of the city-god (ūrkkōṭṭam),⁶ to the temple of the spear-god

1 Cf. Neṭunalvātai, ll. 39-44.

2 It appears that ladies had two kinds of dresses: one for the day and the other for the night.

3 Kalpaka was the divine tree in heaven, whose fragrance and flowers were enjoyed by Indrāṇī.

4 This is the Airāvata temple, the Airāvata being the mount of Indra, the king of heaven.

5 The temple of Balarāma.

6 The reference is to the god enshrined at Kailāsa, that is Siva.

(vērkkōṭṭam),¹ to the temple of the Vajra (vaccirakkōṭṭam),² to the temple of the Deity who dwells outside the city (Aiyanār) (purampaṇaiyānvālkōṭṭam),³ to the temple of the Nigranthas (niggantakkōṭṭam),⁴ and to the temple of the Moon (nilākkōṭṭam)⁵ and besought all these gods thus: 'O ye gods! Relieve me of my great trouble.' Then she betook herself to the temple⁶ of the famous Śāttan learned in the sāstra called pāsaṇṭam and besought his counsel.

At that time appeared before her one, a young creeper-like girl, as if mocking others by her beauty, who said, 'O faultless woman! God will not grant a boon to those who have not performed penance. This is not a false statement; it is a true saying: so hand to me this dead body.' Saying that, she forcibly snatched the corpse from the (poor) woman's hands and went in the darkness, when all slept, to the ground *cuṭukāṭṭukkōṭṭam*⁷ where the goblin

1 This is the temple of Muruka.

2 Either it was a temple where Vajra specially was worshipped or it is a reference to Indra's shrine. Cf. Maṇi., canto i, l. 27.

3 Aṭiyārkunallār identifies this with Sātavāhana's temple. See Tolk. 'Sey.' sūtra 118, comm. See also Divākaram, st. 12.

4 This was a Jaina temple.

5 Here is evidence of a separate temple dedicated to the Moon-god.

6 This and the above few lines show that as many as eleven temples were found in the city belonging to different cults. They also show that the worship of Indra, of the Moon, of the Sun, and of Balarāma, which has now become practically extinct, was extant in the early centuries of the Christian era. In those days, it is also seen that the people worshipped at all temples including that of the Jaina and the pāsaṇḍa (heretic gods). This demonstrates that there was no sectarian outlook in matters religious.

7 The cuṭukāṭṭukkōṭṭam can be identified with cakravāḷakkōṭṭam mentioned in Maṇi., canto vi. Though it is difficult to fix

Itākinī who eats buried dead bodies, took the child's corpse and devoured it. Before her who cried out like a peacock at the visitation of thunder, appeared the God Śāttan,¹ who comforted her with the following words: 'O mother! Do not weep in your distress. Look before you and behold the living child.'

To fulfil the promise, the God himself assumed the form of that child and lay in the grove which was the haunt of cuckoos. The overjoyed Mālati took up this illusory child, clasped it to her bosom and (going home) handed it to its mother.

This divine Brahman child grew into a boy² and acquired a profound knowledge of the sacred scriptures. Later, when his parents died, he settled all disputes among their relations, and performed all the religious obsequies due to them.³ Afterwards he married a lady named Tēvanti and lived with her (for some time) saying 'May your flower-like eyes bear this (divine) sight.'

(One day) he appeared to her in his eternal form of youth and then vanished asking her to go to his shrine. After he had gone with those inspiring words, Tēvanti, who was worshipping at his temple every day, gave out as the date of the origin of the institution of cremation, it seems reasonable to suppose that it is as old as that of burial.

1 Śāttan can be identified with Sāsta now enshrined in the Sāsta temples which are generally found on the outskirts of villages. See article 'Aśoka's Religion' in J.O.R., 1930, p. 278.

2 A brahmacārī.

3 The svadharma of a Brahman brahmacārī and householder which is furnished here agrees with what is prescribed in the Dharmaśāstras and the Dharmasūtras. For the six duties incumbent on the householder see Hindu Administrative Institutions, pp. 188-9.

a pretext¹ (for his absence) 'He has left me saying that he will visit all the sacred places. Please bring him back to me.'

Having come to know that the good lady Kaṇṇaki of undiminished repute had cause for distress, and thinking of it with a sorrowful heart, Tēvanti worshipped the god for her sake with (offerings of) aruku, (Aerua lanata) and paddy, and went (to Kaṇṇaki), with the blessing 'May you get back your husband.'

But Kaṇṇaki replied, 'Though I may get him back, my heart will still be pained; for I have had a dream.² It was thus. We went, hand in hand, to a great city. There some people belonging to the city said something which was unbearably unjust. Some crime was thrown upon Kōvalan. It stung me like a scorpion-bite. Hearing it, I pleaded before the protecting king. The king as well as the city would witness a great calamity. I shall not say more because it was a bad dream. O lady with close-fitting bangles, if you listen to the evil deed done to me and the happy results³ achieved by me and my husband, you will laugh (in derision).'

Tēvanti replied: 'O lady wearing golden bangles! You have not been discarded by your husband. This trouble is due to your having failed to perform a vow in a former birth. If you wish to wipe off that evil, go to the spot where the Kāvērī meets the roaring sea. There is a park where the neytal opens its petals, and where two

1 To those who asked her why she was staying at the shrine, she used to answer thus.

2 Note how the dream came true.

3 The evil deed is the plucking off of her breasts. The happy results are the attainment of heaven.

sacred tanks are dedicated to the Sun (Sūryakuṇḍam) and the Moon (Sōmakuṇḍam)¹ respectively. Those women who bathe in them and worship the God of love² enshrined there, will ever enjoy the company of their husbands in this world. Besides they will also attain Heaven (Bōga-būmi). We shall go there one day to bathe.'

But bejewelled Kaṇṇaki said in reply to the charming lady, 'That is not proper'³ and sometime after this a young maidservant approached her and said, 'Our Kōvalaṇ has arrived at the gate. It looks as if he will protect us for a long time.' Kōvalaṇ went into the house and entering the bedchamber was stricken with grief at the sight of the pale Kaṇṇaki, his fair wife, and said, 'By consorting with a false woman who makes every false thing appear like truth, I have lost the rich store of my ancestral wealth. O, the poverty I have caused (to our house) makes me ashamed of myself.'

Comforting him with a fascinating smile on her brightening face, she replied, 'O, do not grieve! You yet have my anklets. Accept them'⁴ Then Kōvalaṇ retorted, 'O, my good girl, listen. I will use this anklet as my capital

1 In a note Dr. Swaminatha Aiyar seems to identify these with Sōmatīrtham and Sūryatīrtham in Tiruveṅkāṭu. The Paṭṭiṇappālai (Pattuppāṭṭu), l. 39, refers to these as irukāmatṭaiyēri, the lakes which give one's desire.

2 The reference is to a temple of Manmatha or the God of Love. Though festivals in his honour are still conducted, we have no separate temples to this deity. Cf. Paṭṭiṇappālai, l. 39, and cīvakaśintāmaṇi, st. 1598.

3 This is in keeping with the sentiment of the Kuraḷveṇṇpā, st. 55, where it is stated that chaste ladies offer worship to no God but their husbands.

4 Kaṇṇaki spoke thinking that Kōvalaṇ wanted to take some more ornaments to the dancing-girl Mātavi.

to recover all the jewels and all the wealth I have lost.¹ Rise up, O lady with the tresses decorated with choice flowers! Come with me to the city of Madura highly renowned for its tower.' Impelled by fate he decided to start before the heavy darkness of the night was dispelled by the Sun.

VEṆPĀ

The dream dreamt by his wife made the words of the black and long-eyed Mātavi empty. Early, before the sun dispelled the darkness of night, (Kōvalan and his wife) started, impelled by fate which had decreed their doom long ago.

1 The author seems to infer from the life of Kōvalan that the leading of an immoral life will result in the loss of all wealth and property.

CANTO X

NATUKAN KATAI

OR

THE SIGHT OF THE KINGDOM

ON the last day on which the last watch of the night was dark,¹ when the eye of the sky (the sun) had not opened, and when the white moon that shone in the company of the stars had vanished, Kōvalan and (Kaṇṇaki) started forth driven by their fate.

Having passed out of their tall outer gate with its very famous latched door² where the goat and the yak and the swan³ with its soft down were roaming about in a sense of kinship, they circumambulated the temple sacred to Maṇivaṇṇan (Viṣṇu) sleeping his all-perceiving sleep⁴ on his beautiful serpent-couch. Going beyond it they left

1 The Indra festival commenced on Saturday, Citrāpauṇami, and continued for 28 days ending with Monday (Star Anusam) of the month of Vaikāśi and resulting in the ūṭal of Kōvalan and Mātavi. The journey to Madura by Kōvalan was begun the next Tuesday, when the star Kēṭṭai was in the ascendant. (See Aṭiyārkunallār's commentary). This calculation is incorrect.

2 The idea here is that when the gate was made, the latch formed an integral part of it. It means it was not separate from it.

3 It would appear from the commentary that these domesticated animals were also artistically carved on the gateway. If so it bears evidence that wood carving was practised in the ancient Tamil land.

4 Yoganidra of Viṣṇu. This demonstrates that Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki offered prayers to the Vaiṣṇava deity. Later it is behind them the seven *viḥāras*¹ made by Indra, where divinities moving in the sky explained treatises on dharma, which were the divine words of the Aṛavōṇ (the Buddha),² under the cool shade of the green *bōdi*³ tree which had five lofty branches.

They then worshipped, and went round the highly shining śilātala,⁴ jointly built by the Jaina householders for the benefit of the Cāraṇar⁵ who would assemble, on festive days, such as the day of the first freshes (in the Kāvēri) and of the car-festival, under the entrancingly cool shade of the golden flowered asōka tree, standing on a high platform where all the five termini sacred to the five great yōgins converged.⁶ There gathered the men of penance who had abjured meat eating, and taken the vow, of speaking the truth alone, and purified themselves of all sins, understanding the true path by restraining their senses.⁷ said that they worshipped at the Jaina śilātala. This bears testimony to the fact that there was little difference between earlier Jainism and the orthodox religion.

1 See canto xxvii, l. 92 infra. The literal meaning of the term viḥāra is 'not constructed either by hand or by machinery;' it is a mind-born institution. See Maṇi., canto xxvi, l. 55 and canto xxviii, l. 70.

2 See Maṇi., canto xxi, l. 48.

3 Mābōdi is a tree with five branches. Maṇi., canto xxx, l. 10. Bōdimūlam (mahābōdi) is the aśvattha tree under which Gautama Buddha saw the great light.

4 It was made of candrakānta or moonstone.

5 The Jaina Cāraṇar are under reference. They visited Pukār on certain festival days. The tree sacred to them was the aśōka.

6 These yōgis are commonly known as Pañcaparamēṣṭins. They are Arhat, Siddha, Ācārya, Upādhyāya and Sādhu.

7 The practice of the Sāvakas is referred to.

They then passed beyond the entrance-gate (of the city), which looked like a long river with its source in a hill, and reached the outer wall which enclosed a lake and a grove (ilavantikai)¹ lined by beautiful trees thickly covered with several sorts of flowers, which were offered along with lovely Spring and the Hill-breeze as a tribute to the (Coḷa) king by the bodiless God (Kāma).

Proceeding further still, they crossed the broad road rendered cool by the low branches of trees on either side which led to a bathing place on the Kāvēri, and going westwards they penetrated to the distance of a kātam into the flowery grove on the northern bank of the river celebrated for its freshes, until they reached the residence of the saint Kavunti (Kavuntippaḷḷi) which was a grove of flowering trees. There the slender-waisted (Kaṇṇaki) felt fatigued. Her feet were sore (with walking). Breathing hard, she of the fragrant tresses asked in a lisping voice, displaying her sharp-edged teeth, 'Which is the ancient city of Madura?' Kōvalan smiled a smile of hidden grief and said, 'Girl of the fragrant five-plaited hair, it is over thirty leagues² from our extensive city. It is very near.' Then he visited with his sweet-voiced wife the venerable Kavunti who lived there,³ and both prostrated themselves before her.

1 Ilavantikai was the king's park in which was a lake. Cf. nirāḷimaṇṭapam used nowadays in connexion with temple festivals. See canto xxv, l. 4, infra; also Maṇi., canto ili, ll. 45-6.

2 The distance from Uraiyūr to Madura is 30 kātams. Feeling that Kaṇṇaki was already wearied, Kōvalan did not tell her outright that it was 30 kātams, but said it was six times five leagues so that she would not be alarmed at the long distance!

3 This is referred to as a portion of the Sri-kōil where he lived with the revered Kavunti. It may be noted that the two forms Kāvunti and Kavunti occur in the text.

The saint looked at them and said 'You have attractive features, noble lineage and highly commendable conduct. You appear to be faultlessly observing dharma as laid down in the sacred Jaina scriptures.¹ Why is it that you have left your home and come so far in great distress?'

Kōvalan replied: 'There is not much to say in reply to what you ask, O great saint! I am only eager to go to the ancient city of Madura to make a fortune.' The saint answered, 'If that is so, these tender feet (Kaṇṇaki's) cannot stand the sharp and rough gravel. This fair lady is not fit to go through the jungle. But who knows? Though the journey is not fit for you, you will not abandon it even if I ask you to do so.² Since I am very anxious to visit flawless Madura in the good Tamil country of the south, there to worship Arivan by listening to the dharma preached by the sinless saints, who have, by their purity, got rid of all their adharma, I shall also go with you. Let us go!' Thereupon Kōvalan worshipped the venerable Kavunti with lifted palms and replied 'O saint, if you so favour us, I shall be relieved of my anxiety about this girl with shoulder-bangles.'

Kavunti continued :

'See, O Kōvalan! There are various kinds of troubles to be met in our way (to Madura).³ Listen : If we decide to go through shady places covered with cool flowers with 1 Kavunti was a Jain and so she speaks with a partiality to the dharma of that religion.

2 The implication here is, 'Who knows what Fate has in store for you?'

3 The forest-route is described as containing snares and pitfalls. The chief produce was jack-fruit; turmeric and ginger also grew there.

this tender lady who cannot endure the scorching sun, we may, perchance, encounter the dire distress which comes to people who do not avoid the deep and deceitful pits caused by the men who dug out the edible valli roots growing underground, and covered over with the faded flowers from the grove of campaka trees. If they cautiously avoid these fallen flowers and walk on, they will knock their heads against fully ripe jack-fruits. If then they go into the luxuriant gardens where the turmeric and ginger plants are grown, they will unwittingly tread upon the hard seeds of jack-fruits lying hidden.

‘O loving husband of the lady with carp-like long eyes, if we decide to go along the fields,¹ this damsel will be frightened by the otters, who drive away the quarrelling carps in ponds fragrant with flowers, and seize in their mouths the long-backed vālai fish when they are leaping across the tank where the malanku live.²

‘Again, the honey-filled hives built (by bees) on sugar-canes, will have been dismantled (by the wind) filling the drinking-water of the tank encircled by sugar-canes with honey³ and bees. It is possible that our lady, in a fit of delusion will take the water in her joined palms and drink it (along with the bees) to quench her insufferable thirst.

‘Again those who pluck out the weeds will have scattered the water-lily on the ridges in which multi-tinted beetles⁴ will be lying in a stupor after having drunk the

1 The second route through the agricultural tracts is suggested. Here were cultivated fields interspersed by ponds.

2 A fish whose head resembled that of a snake.

3 The statement suggests that honey was food forbidden to Jains.

4 Here is the preaching of ahimsā or non-injury carried to its utmost limit.

honey of the flowers. As you walk along, your feet may unconsciously tread on them.

‘If you decide to walk along the bunds of canals where waters splash you will tread upon multi-spotted crabs and snails, and cause unbearable pain to them.’¹

‘There is no other route anywhere except through fields and groves. O friend with a tuft of curly hair! Know these signs and avoid such dangers as you go along in the company of this fair lady.’

Thus saying, the venerable Kavunti took up her sacred begging-bowl and her netted bag suspended from her shoulders.² Holding a peacock’s feathers in her hand and praying that the *pañcamantra*³ might be their guide on the way, Kavunti, unrivalled in the practice of virtues, accompanied the other two in their journey.

Though Saturn gets angry,⁴ though the (fiery) comet⁵ is visible, though Venus of the bright rays travels towards 1 Further emphasis on observing the principle of ahimsā, the cardinal doctrine of the Jains, though it largely figures in the orthodox religion of the Hindus.

2 The begging-bowl (kaṭijñai), the url, and peacocks’ feathers are the outfit of the Jaina ascetic. See Nālatiyār, ‘Ekaī’, l. 9; Mani., canto vi, l. 93.

3 The pañcamantra; a, śi, ā. u, sā. The Jains style this pañcanamaskāram. These symbols represent Arhat, Siddha, Acārya, Upādhyāya, and Sādhu, the first letters of the Pañcaparamēṣṭins. Its counterpart in orthodox religion is pañcākṣara, namaśivāya.

4 Evidence of the author’s knowledge of astronomical science. Saturn grows angry when he lodges himself in R̥ṣabha, Mīna, and Simha.

5 The Dhūmakētu of Sanskrit literature, the south (of the sky),¹ no harm is rendered to the Kāveri which has its source in the wind-swept heights of the Coorg hills where, to the accompaniment of raging thunder, the seasonal clouds pregnant with rain pour down their blessings the Kāveri which dashes along with such diverse hill produce to meet the advancing tide of the wealth-bearing sea.² But finding her movement arrested by the barrier—the anicut with its doorway—she noisily leaps beyond it in the sportive mood natural to her first freshes. No sound other than this can be heard. We can hear there neither the sound of the bucket,³ not of the water-lift; neither the usually loud pecottah, nor the palm-leaf basket used in irrigation.

In the beautiful forest of lotuses appearing out of ponds in regions surrounded by paddy-fields and sugar-cane could be heard, just as in a battle-field⁴ where two monarchs fight, different kinds of sounds produced by the water-fowl,⁵ the loud-voiced crane, the red-footed swan, the green-footed heron, wild fowl, the water crow (black heron), fishes, creeping insects, birds and big herons.

Wallowing in the mire, in regions left unploughed, black buffaloes would come out with their unwashed hair and their red eyes, and rub their itching backs upon the

1 These signs are supposed to forebode evil by causing drought.

2 Conch, coral, pearls, etc., are the products of the sea.

3 It is interesting to see here the different methods of irrigating fields. Cf. Kaut. Artha., Bk. II, chap. 4 'Sītādhyakṣa'. See also Maturaikkāñci, ll. 89-93. Most of these methods still survive in rural areas.

4 The confused noise of the battle-field is compared to the different kinds of sounds made by a number of water-birds.

5 Here is a categorical list of water-birds.

straw granary when it gets loose and releases the grain stocked within amidst the sheaves of paddy whose rice-corn hangs down like fly whisks¹ made of the fur of the kavari yak. In those places brawny-armed labourers and cultivators would assemble making a motley of sound.

There was also the sound of (rural) songs² sung to (new) tunes by low-caste women in their drunken moods³ while they looked through their fish-like large eyes and uttered indecent words standing in playful postures and, threw mud upon each other, covering up their broad, bangled shoulders and breasts with mud, having removed the (faded) fragrant flowers from their hair and replaced them with paddy-shoots.

There was also the sound of the benedictory songs (ērmaṅkalam) sung reverently by ploughmen⁴ standing by their ploughshares and seeming to break open the ground which then decorated with garlands made of paddy-stalks, luxuriant aṟuku, and water-lilies.

There was also heard the mukavai song⁵ sung (by the field-labourers) when they drove cattle over the reaped paddy sheaves to thresh the corn; and the cheering applause⁶ of those who heard the round-shaped-tabor

1 Fly whisks were generally made of the fur of the yak.

2 A description of typical rural life.

3 Low-caste women were addicted to drinking. They decked themselves with paddy-shoots in their hair.

4 This refers to the simplicity and sincerity of the ploughmen at their work and points to the dignity of field labour. They knew the advantages of deep ploughing.

5 A kind of song sung by field-labourers on the threshing-floor of paddy fields. Cf. Puram., st. 371.

6 This is what is called kaḷavaḷivaḷttu. According to the Tolkāppiyam it is erkaḷavaḷi (the song of the plough) different smearcd with mud played by proud minstrels who used to produce clear music by their kiṇai.¹

Having heard these sounds in regular succession along the banks of the great rivers, the travellers grew glad in their hearts and did not feel the fatigue of the journey.

As they passed along, with success due to the prowess of the reigning Cōla who owned the chariot with the tiger-flag, they saw everywhere the sacrificial smoke, raised by Brahmans in the agnisāla of their tall houses² which closely resembled fog-covered hills, capable of impregnating even the rain-bearing clouds.³

Going further, they saw ancient and prosperous villages of cultivators,⁴ the sons of Dame Kāvēri and her expansive waters, who were responsible for the support of the needy and their dependants, and for the victory of the monarch.⁵ They also saw rustic parts interspersed by villages where the rising fumes of the ovens, in which the sugar-cane⁶ juice was being boiled, spread far and wide from pōrkkaḷavaḷi (a warsong). Cf. Pura, Venṇāmālai, 'Vākaip-pāṭalam', st. 32.

1 One of the many rural amusements. They were minstrels who sang the praises of Veḷālas to the accompaniment of the kiṇai drum.

2 A description of the Brahman residences.

3 Conclusive proof of the fire rite being practised on an extensive scale by Brahmans in the early Christian era in the Tamil land. It implies the acceptance of the theory that sacrifices cause rain, which finds a parallel in the Bhagavat Gītā (ch. v), where it is said 'Yajñad bhavati Parjanya.'

4 Different types of villages were encountered.

5 The author realized that agriculture is the mainstay of the king and kingdom.

6 The manufacture of sugar and jaggery from sugar-cane was a common industry in the rural parts of ancient Tamil India, of Nature, Our great God, the One of undiminishing fame, the great King of virtues,¹ the All-Prosperous,² the great God,³ the Self-born,⁴ the four-faced,⁵ the Bestower of the angas,⁶ the Arhat, the peace-bestowing Saint, the One God, the Possessor of eight qualities,⁷ the indivisible old Substance, the Dweller in the Heaven, the foremost of the Vēdas,⁸ and the shining Light that dispels ignorance. None can escape the prison⁹ of this body unless he obtains the illumination of the revealed Vēda proclaimed by Him who has the various (above-mentioned) names.'

Hearing these truthful words of the Cāraṇa, Kavunti, pre-eminent in penance, joined her hands on her head, and said: 'My ears will not open themselves to hear anything other than the words of wisdom revealed by Him who vanquished the Three (Desire, Anger and Delusion). My tongue will not say anything other than the 1008 names¹⁰

1 Also the possessor of all virtues.

2 Sankara.

3 Iśa.

4 Svāyambhuva.

5 Caturmukha.

6 It may be the anga portion of the Vēdic texts. As applied to the Jains it is anga-āgama.

7 These are anantajñānam, anantadarśanam, anantavīryam, anantasukham, nirnāmam, nirgōtram, nirāyuṣyam and aliyāviyalpu. See Arumpatavuraiyāṣiriyar. For the term eṅkuṇattāñ, see Kuṛaḷ, and commentary of Parimēlaḷakar.

8 The three āgamas, Angāgama, Pūrvāgama, and Bahuśrutiāgama, are supposed to be the Vēdas of the Jains.

9 The term used is potiyaṛai, literally the 'underground chamber with no opening'. In Maṇi., cantos iii, l. 95; xxiii, 1-60; iv, l. 105, it is named pulukkaṛai.

10 What is called the Sahasranāmas of the Lord. Cf. Maṇi., canto v, ll. 77-9.

of the victor of Kāma. My eyes will not see, though they seem to see, anything other than the pair of feet of Him who overcame the Five (senses).¹ My useless body will not touch the earth except before the holy body of Him² who has taken upon himself virtue out of His grace. My two hands will not join together to reverence any one other than the Knower who expounds dharma to Arhats. My crown will not suffer any flower to be placed on it except the flower-like feet of Him who walked upon flowers.³ My mind will not permit me to learn by heart anything other than the sacred words uttered by the God of interminable bliss.'

Hearing with approval these words of praise from her, the Cāraṇa arose from the silāvaṭṭam and rising to a height of two spans, blessed Kavuntī saying, 'May thy birth-causing bondage cease!'⁴ and as he went away along a path in the sky, they worshipped him saying, 'May our bondage cease.'

After having stepped into a boat at the landing-place of the great river Kāverī where rain-bearing clouds rested on the flowery groves, the couple and the great saint crossed over to the peerless temples on the southern bank where they rested for a while in a flowery grove full of fallen flowers.

Just then a trifier passed by their side in that grove filled with fragrance, prating useless love-talk to a newly

1 A Jitendriya according to the Sanskritists.

2 The idea is that she will not prostrate herself before anybody except God.

3 Cf. Kuraḷ where the expression malarmīṣai ēkinān occurs. We have not been able to trace any legend of the God walking on flowers.

4 Samsārapāsa-bandham.

over heaps of stored corn which appeared like dark clouds resting on mountains. They did not travel more than one kātam each day.

After several days' journey, they reached Srīrangam,¹ where the river (the Kāvēri) was hidden by the city. Nearby was the habitation of the Dēvas—a spot filled with the fragrance of different independent flowers in the middle of groves of trees fenced by the bent bamboo. There appeared one Cāraṇa² who was well known for his great skill in expounding the rules of dharma, given to the world by the pre-eminent Perumakaṇ,³ and who was returning from the glittering bright silātala of the paṭṭiṇappākkam of Pukār which had been jointly erected by the high-minded householders (aiyar)⁴ and where he was in the habit of sitting.

Kavunti who had recognized the approach of this Cāraṇa, fell prostrate with her companions at his feet saying: 'May all our past sins perish.' Though the Cāraṇa who had a knowledge of the past, present and future⁵ knew the reason for their coming there, he did not feel

1 Srīrangam, now two miles from the town of Tiruchirapalli.

2 In a note Dr. Swaminatha Aiyar identifies these Cāraṇar with Samaṇa sages of whom there were eight classes. See Cūṭamaṇi, p. 36.

3 Perumakaṇ is an epithet for Arhat in the context. The threefold eminence is related to three adīśayams which are natural, karmaic and providential.

4 The term aiyar used here is significant. It seems to be used in connexion with people who evoked regard from the masses. Undoubtedly it comes from the term ārya, which has in our opinion no ethnic connotation as scholars would make us believe.

5 Avatijñānam according to Arumpatavuraiyācīriyar.

afflicted being a hero who had completely put aside attachment and anger.

He then spoke as follows: 'O Kavunti of great and abundant distinction! You know how inexorable are the laws of destiny.¹ They do not cease (from action) even if ordered to cease. Nor can its wholesome effect be wiped away. They are like the sprouts shooting forth from sown seeds. Like the lighted lamp that is extinguished in an open plain when the high winds blow, is life in a body.

'The All-Knowing, the incarnation of dharma, He who has transcended all limits of understanding, the great Friend, the great Victor (Jinendra),² the Accomplisher,³ the Great Person (Bhagavan), the foundation of all dharma, the Lord, the All-Righteous, the Inner Essence (of the Āgama), the Pure, the Ancient-One, the All-Wise, the Vanquisher of Wrath, the Dēva, the Blissful Lord,⁴ the Supreme Being, the Possessor of all virtues, the Light that illumines the world above, the great Truth, the All-Humble, the great Cāraṇa,⁵ the Root Cause of all, the yōgin,⁶ the great One, the great Illumination, the Dweller in everything,⁷ the great Guru, the Embodiment 1 Cf. Nālaṭiyār—the whole of 'Paḷaviṇai', esp. st. 4.

2 They are jñānāvāraṇīyam, darśanāvāraṇīyam, vēdanīyam, mōhanīyam, āyūṣyam, nāmam, gōtram, and antarāyam. See Aṭiyārkkunallār's gloss.

3 Also Kṛtakṛtya (Sans.) The term in the text is sidda.

4 The one who gives liberation to all. It should be noted that the term mōkṣa is given as śivagati, literally the attainment of the Saiva world.

5 He who could move about at his will.

6 The master of the eight mystic powers.

7 Cf. Maṇi., canto v, l. 71.

of Nature, Our great God, the One of undiminishing fame, the great King of virtues,¹ the All-Prosperous,² the great God,³ the Self-born,⁴ the four-faced,⁵ the Bestower of the angas,⁶ the Arhat, the peace-bestowing Saint, the One God, the Possessor of eight qualities,⁷ the indivisible old Substance, the Dweller in the Heaven, the foremost of the Vēdas,⁸ and the shining Light that dispels ignorance. None can escape the prison⁹ of this body unless he obtains the illumination of the revealed Vēda proclaimed by Him who has the various (above-mentioned) names.'

Hearing these truthful words of the Cāraṇa, Kavunti, pre-eminent in penance, joined her hands on her head, and said: 'My ears will not open themselves to hear anything other than the words of wisdom revealed by Him who vanquished the Three (Desire, Anger and Delusion). My tongue will not say anything other than the 1008 names¹⁰

1 Also the possessor of all virtues.

2 Sankara.

3 Iśa.

4 Svāyambhuva.

5 Caturmukha.

6 It may be the anga portion of the Vēdic texts. As applied to the Jains it is anga-āgama.

7 These are anantajñānam, anantadarśanam, anantavīryam, anantasukham, nirnāmam, nirgōtram, nirāyuṣyam and aḷiyāvi yalpu. See Arumpatavuraiyāṣiriyar. For the term eṇkuṇattāñ, see Kuraḷ, and commentary of Parimēlaḷakar.

8 The three āgamas, Angāgama, Pūrvāgama, and Bahuśru-tiāgama, are supposed to be the Vēdas of the Jains.

9 The term used is potiyaṛai, literally the 'underground chamber with no opening'. In Maṇi., cantos iii, l. 95; xxiii, l. 60; iv, l. 105, it is named pulukkarai.

10 What is called the Sahasranāmas of the Lord. Cf. Maṇi., canto v, ll. 77-9.

of the victor of Kāma. My eyes will not see, though they seem to see, anything other than the pair of feet of Him who overcame the Five (senses).¹ My useless body will not touch the earth except before the holy body of Him² who has taken upon himself virtue out of His grace. My two hands will not join together to reverence any one other than the Knower who expounds dharma to Arhats. My crown will not suffer any flower to be placed on it except the flower-like feet of Him who walked upon flowers.³ My mind will not permit me to learn by heart anything other than the sacred words uttered by the God of interminable bliss.'

Hearing with approval these words of praise from her, the Cāraṇa arose from the silāvaṭṭam and rising to a height of two spans, blessed Kavuntī saying, 'May thy birth-causing bondage cease!'⁴ and as he went away along a path in the sky, they worshipped him saying, 'May our bondage cease.'

After having stepped into a boat at the landing-place of the great river Kāverī where rain-bearing clouds rested on the flowery groves, the couple and the great saint crossed over to the peerless temples on the southern bank where they rested for a while in a flowery grove full of fallen flowers.

Just then a trifler passed by their side in that grove filled with fragrance, prating useless love-talk to a newly

1 A Jitendriya according to the Sanskritists.

2 The idea is that she will not prostrate herself before anybody except God.

3 Cf. Kuraḷ where the expression malarmisai ekinān occurs. We have not been able to trace any legend of the God walking on flowers.

4 Samsārapāśa-bandham.

found sweetheart.¹ Desiring to know who the couple (Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki) were, who looked like Kāma and Rati, they approached (Kavunti) and said: 'O Saint whose body has been famished by going without food on all fast days,² who are these people who have come with you?' Kavuntī replied: 'They are my children. They are human beings.³ Do not approach them.⁴ They are tired on account of their journey.' The newcomers asked in return, 'O wise one, who has known all the sāstras, have you ever heard the children of the same parents becoming husband and wife?'

Kaṇṇaki closed her ears when she heard these sarcastic words and shuddered in the presence of her husband. Kavunti imprecated on them a curse of an extraordinary penance: 'Since these two seem to insult my dear one, fair as a flower garland, they shall become old jackals in the thorny forest.' Because this curse was uttered by one who had done penance, Kōvalan and his wife of the fragrant tresses, soon heard the long howl of the jackals (into which the lovers had been transformed) and trembled. They said, 'Though those who deviate from the path of virtue speak unjust words, still should it not be attributed to their ignorance?⁵ O Saint, please state when these men who have blundered in your presence will be released from this curse.' The saint replied: 'Those who have descended into a lower order of birth due to lack of knowledge will wander in trouble for twelve months in the 1 Cf. Kuraḷ, 1311; Maṇi., canto x, l. 22.

2 See Maṇi., canto xviii, l. 122; Cīvaka-cintāmaṇi. l. 1547.

3 The statement implies that they were not Kāma and Rati as supposed by them.

4 Implying 'go your own way.'

5 Cf. Kuraḷ, st. 127.

forest-belt outside the Uraiyūr fortress-wall; they may afterwards regain their original forms.'

After their release from the curse had been pronounced, Saint Kavunti, Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki went to the place vāraṇam (Uraiyūr) so-called because once in that place a fowl, having feathers on its body, had vanquished in war an elephant (vāraṇa) whose ears were as broad as a winnowing fan.¹

Kaṭṭurai

Thus ends the Pukār section describing the descentence of the Cōla line which, among the three crowned kings,² shone with their strong arms glittering with bracelets. It speaks of the monarch's virtue, valour³ and high deeds of renown;⁴ of the fame of the ancient city of Pukār; of the greatness of festival;⁵ of the visit of Dēvas;⁶ of his subjects who were perpetually happy;⁷ of the abundance of their food;⁸ of the unparalleled glory of their faultless, divine Kāvēri,⁹ of the unfailing first freshes due to seasonal rains; of their courts,¹⁰ dances,¹¹ ballads and min-

1 Cf. Kaṭṭittokai, st. 42; Maṇi., canto xxix, l. 121.

2 The Cēra, the Cōla, and the Pāṇṭya, the principal kings of the Tamiḻ land.

3 v, ll. 97-8.

4 ibid. vi, l. 14.

5 ibid. v.

6 ibid.; also vi, ll. 72-73.

7 x, ll. 149-50.

8 ibid. ll. 123-4.

9 ibid. ll. 102-109; vii, ll. 2-5; ll. 25-7.

10 iii, ll. 99 and 106.

11 iii, l. 16.

strelsies;¹ of their dramatic representations of bārata-virutti,² of erotic compositions relating to aintiṇai, and other analogous compositions;³ of the tunes of their musical instruments (yāl) of the fourteen sakōṭāms;⁴ of the iṭanilaippālai;⁵ of their songs the *tārattākkam*⁶ and the four pans; of the noises of the city-chariot;⁷ and of the lustrous pāṇi;⁸ all these and many more redounding to the unique glory of the king.

VENPĀ

Like the sun that rises in the morning and the moon that appears in the evening, may far-famed Pukār which forms the garland of the sea-girt earth, live for ever.⁹

1 viii, ll. 74-108.

2 vi, ll. 39-63.

3 vi, ll. 17-23.

4 iii, l. 88.

5 iii, l. 70.

6 vii, ll. 35 and 44.

7 v, ll. 38-40.

8 iii, l. 135 and x, l. 131.

9 The idea is 'let Pukār last as long as the sun and moon endure.'

II. MATURAIK KANTAM

CANTO IX

KATUKAN KATAI

OR

THE SIGHT OF THE FOREST

UNDERNEATH the thick shade of the asōka tree with its hanging flowers, the woman ascetic (Kavunti) worshipped the first God Arivan¹, more radiant than the rising sun, under three umbrellas arranged like three moons placed one above the other, and graciously spoke the good and wise words uttered by the Cāraṇar, to all the sages of the kantaṇpaḷḷi,² in the extensive grove adjoining Araṅkam.³

After spending that day at their residence and wishing to go in a southerly direction, Kavunti, Kōvalaṇ and Kaṇṇaki left Vāraṇam (Uṛaiyūr) before day-break, and when the sun began to illumine the eastern sky, they reached a beautiful naṇṭapam situated in the midst of a grove of young trees in a fertile spot containing a tank.

1 The Nāyaṇār enshrined in the temple at Uṛaiyūr. This was a Jain temple. The expression ādiyirōṛram may mean 'the god with no beginning or end' or 'a very ancient god.'

2 This may refer to Uṛaiyūr Kantaṇpaḷḷi, the sacred hall of the Nirgranthas. Or it may refer to a shrine sacred to Kandaṇ or Subrahmaṇya.

3 Srirangam was then known as Araṅkam and later as Tir-uvaraṅkam. It is situated two miles from Trichinopoly.

There they met a venerable Brahmana who praised the Pāṇṭyan of unblemished repute thus: 'May our great king live for ever, protecting this world from aeon to aeon! Long live the Tennavan, the ruler of the southern region, who added to it¹ the Ganges and the Himalayan regions in the north, who once showed his prowess to the other kings by standing on the shore of the sea and 'throwing his spear upon the fierce waters which, in a spirit of revenge, consumed the river Pahrūṇi² and the Kumari with their adjoining groups of hills.

'Long live he who wore on his shining breast the bright garland of Indra, adding glory to the lunar race! Long live our king who, when thunder-clouds withheld abundant showers, smote the bracelet³ set in the crown of Indra, and imprisoned the clouds, so that there might be great prosperity from an unfailing harvest of crops.'

1 This is a reference to the Pāṇṭyan invasion of North India, thus corroborating the tradition that the three prominent kings of the south went on a conquering mission as far as the Himalayas. In the south itself the Pāṇṭyan wrested Muttūrkkūrāṁ from the Cōla and Kuṇṭūrkkūrāṁ from the Cēra (see Aṭiyārkunallār's commentary).

2 See Purāṁ., st. 9. A river Parali seems to exist even now (see The Travancore State Manual, Vol. I, p. 240 n.). Here is a legendary description of the sea eroding the land. Kumārīkkōṭu may refer to the river or to the hills of Kumari. It is better to take it as a reference to the river, since a river of that name is mentioned in the Brahmāṇṭa Purāṇa.

This legend and the following are attributed to Ukra Pāṇṭyan, in the Tiruvīlaiyāṭal Purāṇam. The king is said to have stemmed the tide of the sea by throwing his spear on the rising waves. (See Kaṭalsūvara vēlerinta Tiruvīlaiyāṭal, No. 21, pp. 80-1, 2nd ed., by Dr. Swaminatha Aiyar.)

3' ibid., Intiraṇ mutimēl vaṭaierinta paṭalam. The reference is to king Ukra Pāṇṭyan.

Thereupon Kōvalan asked, 'Where is your native home? What brings you here?'

The Brahmana of undiminishing distinction replied as follows:

'I am a native of Mānkāṭu¹ in the region of Kuṭa-malai (the western hills). I came to satisfy my heart's desire, to see with my own eyes the glory of Viṣṇu, whom many worship with prayer as He reposes with Lakṣmī in His breast, on the couch of the thousand-hooded Serpent, in the temple in Turutti² jutting out on the widening waves of the Kāvēri, even as the blue clouds repose supine on the slopes of the lofty golden mountain (Māru). (I also came to see) the beauty of the red-eyed Lord, holding in His beautiful lotus-hands the discus which is death to His enemies, and also the milk-white conch: (to see Him) wearing a garland of tender flowers on His breast, and draped in golden flowers; and dwelling on the topmost crest of the tall and lofty hill named Vēnkaṭam,³ with innumerable waterfalls, standing like a cloud in its natural hue, adorned with a rainbow and attired with lightning, in the midst of a place both sides of which are illumined by the spreading rays of the sun and the moon.

'Since I saw to the delight of my eyes, the glory and the greatness of the Pāṇṭyan kingdom,⁴ I stayed here blessing the king. This is the reason of my coming here.'

1 Also known as Mānkāl.

2 The term turutti. denotes an islet in general. To venture a conjecture the place under reference may be Srirangam lying between the Kāvēri and the Coleroon.

3 The modern Tirupati Hill. See canto vi, l. 30 above. It is still famous for the number of its waterfalls.

4 It is worth noting that the poet stresses the glory of the Pāṇṭyan through the mouth of a Brahmana who does not belong

Having heard this from the Brahmana who had performed the Vedic sacrifices, Kōvalan said, 'O first among Brahmanas! Pray tell us the best route to Madura.'

The Brahmana replied: 'You have come with your lady in the season when jungle and mountain tracts have given up their natural appearance and taken the form of a desert, losing their smooth surfaces, thus causing deep distress, since King Sun, along with his minister Spring, by reason of his fierce heat, has diminished his essential quality and lost his beneficence, like a great kingdom whose monarch has deviated from the path of right policy under the influence of an unrighteous councillor.'¹

'If, in this long journey, you "swim" across rocks, hillocks (porai),² illusory places and the bunds of lakes full of water, and reach Koṭumbai³ by the bund of a great to his kingdom. The greatness of the kingdom is to be contrasted with the injustice meted out to Kōvalan later by the king, and the consequent bending of the rod of justice. It must be noted also that the age-long righteous sceptre only bent and did not break. For did not Kaṇṇaki herself claim to be the king's daughter and inform us of his innocence? (See 'Vālttukkātai', xxix, p. 577).

1 Here the author of the epic wants to convey to the reader, by comparison and contrast, the impressions of unrighteous rule and the consequent prevalence of anarchy in the land.

2 Also known as pottaimalai.

3 Koṭumpāḷūr containing a tank Neṭuṅkuḷam. It was the capital from which the Vēḷir line of kings ruled. The present town Koṭumpāḷūr in Pudukkottai State contains a large number of inscriptions forming excellent historical material for reconstructing the history of the Vēḷir line. One of the inscriptions supplies the genealogy of this ruling family. Thus the Koṭumpai of the Cilappatikāram played an important part in the early and medieval history of South India. According to the Periyapurāṇam, Itāṇ-lake, you will come to a spot which looks like the devouring trident¹ wielded by the God whose tuft is adorned with a crescent.

‘If you decide to take the route lying to the right and pass by the kaṭampa tree with outspread branches, the dried ōmai tree, the vākai with its cloven stem, the withered bamboo, the equally withered maral dark with fissures, jungles where thirsty deer roam about vainly in search of water, and the haunts of the Eiynar,² you will come across the celebrated Sirumalai³ of the Pāṇṭyan covered on all sides with plants of wild rice, ripe sugar-cane, full-grown millets, rāgi that grows on rich soil, garlic, saffron, beautiful kavalai creepers, plantains, arecas, coconuts growing in bunches, mangoes and jack tree. Keep that hill on your right and reach Madura.

‘If you do not take that route, but choose the route to the left, you will hear winged beetles singing the tune of sevvali,⁴ in the low-lying fields, in glades with cool flowers, and in jungles, primarily desert regions. Passing these you reach Tirumalkunram,⁵ that opens into a cave which kaḷi Nāyanār, one of the sixty-three Saiva saints, had Koṭumpālūr for his capital. (See Chronological List of Inscriptions of the Pudukkottai State, 1929, Nos. 14, 33, 82, etc.; An. Rep. Ep., 1907-8, paras. 87-9.)

1 This indicates that from that spot branched off three routes as explained in the text below.

2 See Dikshitar’s article ‘Eiynar’ in Sentamil, Vol. XXXI, No. 1, for other details.

3 Literally, the little hill. This hill exists today bearing the same name and is noted for its sweet plantains.

4 Sevvali is a primary melody-type of the Mullai region. Cf. Puṇam., st. 144.

5 Tirumalkunram (literally, the hill sacred to Viṣṇu) is the name of a hill near Madura, known as Irumcōlai and Triumālirumremoves all delusion, and leads to the miraculous three ponds, greatly praised by the gods, and called the sacred Śaravaṇam,¹ Bava-kāraṇi and Iṭṭasiddi,² ever renowned. If you bathe in the sacred Śaravaṇam, you will gain knowledge of the book attributed to the king of the gods (Aindra-Vyākaraṇam);³ if you bathe in the Bava-kāraṇi, you will learn the deeds of your past which led to your present birth; if, on the other hand, you bathe in the Iṭṭasiddi pond, you will gain all that you wish for.

If you choose to enter that cave, worship then the great Lord on that very lofty hill, meditating on His colai, isung of by most of the Ālvārs. See also Paripāṭal, st. 15. According to this authority this place was noted for the worship of Vāsudēva and Balarāma. It is not clear when the cult of Balarāma became extinct here or in the Tamil land generally. Today this shrine is known as the Aḷakarmalal. It seems that Aḷakar may be a representation of the form of Balarāma, and not necessarily of Kṛṣṇa. Sundararājan is the Sanskrit rendering of the term Aḷakar.

1 This and the two following are the names of tanks, what we now call Puṣkarāṇi, to bathe in which was supposed to purify. The Sanskrit Purāṇas are full of such lakes noted for their miraculous properties.

2 Sanskrit Iṣṭasiddhi.

3 A grammatical treatise by name Viṇṇavarkōmāṇ Vīṇuṇi attributed to Indra. The reference in the Cilappatikāram is possibly to the Aindra-Vyākaraṇam, the oldest school of Sanskrit grammarians, known to and quoted by Pāṇini and others. It is mentioned in Buddhist Canonical works like the Avadānaśataka (C. Lassen, I. A. K., Vol. II, 2nd ed., p. 477); cf. Tārānātha's History of Indian Buddhism (Schlefer's trans., p. 54). That this grammar was known to Tolkāppīyaṇār is evident from the preface to the Tolkāppiyam. On this subject there is an excellent monograph by A. C. Burnell entitled On the School of Sanskrit Grammarians, 1875.

lotus-feet and going thrice round the hill; there, on the broad banks of the Cilambāru¹ cutting its way through the soil, will appear at the flower-strewn base of the blossoming kōṇku tree, a nymph² fair as a golden creeper, as striking as lightning with cloud-like locks of dark hair, and with serrated bracelets on her shoulders, saying: "Tell me what constitutes the happiness of this birth,³ the happiness of the next⁴ and also eternal happiness⁵ which results neither in birth nor rebirth. I live on this mountain and my name is Varōttamā. To them who answer these questions I am bound in service. So, good people, if

1 Also known as the Nūpura-Gangā. We have, similarly, Ākāśa-Gangā, Pātāla-Gangā, etc.

2 The reference is to a Yakṣiṇī. From the Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki we are led to infer that the Yakṣas were one of the South Indian tribes contemporaneous with the epoch of Rāvaṇa and Vāli. The Yakṣas were the ruling tribe in Ceylon in the fifth century B.C. when Vijaya landed there. But they had practically become extinct by the commencement of the Christian era though a few lingered here and there in forest regions. See Dikshitar's paper 'South India in the Rāmāyaṇa' in the Proceedings of the Seventh Oriental Conference 1933, p. 243 ff.

3 Poruḷ (Sans., artha) or wealth is said to constitute one's happiness in this birth. The idea is that a man of no wealth will always feel miserable. See the Mānavadharmasāstra, ch. 2, st. 224: Cāṇakya Rāja Nīti Sāstra, canto iv, st. 21: also, Tirukkōval, st. 332.

4 Good and righteous deeds on earth contribute to happiness after death. The fruits of actions in this birth are judged and rewarded only in the next birth. This is, in other words, the theory of pre-ordained fate.

5 Salvation or freedom from the bondage of samsāra or worldly life is said to be the highest of the Puruṣārthas. Cf. Kuralvenpā, 233; Puram., st. 50. See also Dikshitar, Hindu Administrative Institutions, p. 37.

you give the right answer, I shall open the door (leading to this cave). On opening the door several passages with entrances will be revealed, and beyond them a gateway with double doors. Beyond that, a creeper-like lady resembling a picture¹ will again appear before you asking, 'What is eternal bliss?'² If you reply, you will obtain one of three desired things.³ But if you are not able to answer, I shall not harm you. You can go on your long journey; I shall help you.'

'If people answer her questions she will show them the three ponds mentioned above, and retire. If you bathe therein, desirous and uttering any one of these things, meditating upon and uttering with equal reverence the two great Vedic mantras of five letters⁴ and eight letters⁵ you will achieve results which cannot be realized even by the hardest of penances

'If you do not desire these benefits, meditate on the lotus-feet of the Lord standing on that hill. If you so meditate, there will appear His lofty Eagle standard. By

1 The word vaṭṭikai in the text means a picture or portrait.

2 Mōkṣa is the term for this in Sanskrit literature.

3 The reference is to muppāl or trivarga of Sanskrit literature.

4 The significance of the Pañcākṣara mantra Namaṣivāya is brought out here. Constant meditation on it is said to rid one of all ills. Even today many orthodox Hindus are initiated by their gurus and continue meditating on this great mantra sacred to Siva.

5 This is the Aṣṭākṣara 'Om namōnārāyaṇāya'. This statement is significant in as much as it proves that the spirit of sectarianism was still non-existent. For, while the Pañcākṣara is sacred to Siva, the Aṣṭākṣara is sacred to Nārāyaṇa or Viṣṇu. It is said that the two mantras must be uttered with equal reverence. Belief in the efficacy of such mantras is still current.

its mere sight and by meditation on His lotus-feet there will be no more rebirth. Rejoicing in that thought go to Madura of traditional glory. Such is the sight worth seeing in that cave.

‘If you reject these routes, there is the straight path that lies midway between them with pleasant villages and groves and several jungles therein. Beyond these dwells a terrific deity who appears to travellers, not causing fear but treating them with civility and causing no harm. If you escape this, the path to Madura will of itself be known to you. So depart and I shall go (to sacred places) to worship the feet of the Lord who measured the whole universe.’¹

After listening to the Brahmana’s account of the routes, the saint Kavunti made a categorical reply: ‘O Brahmana versed in the four Vēdas and engaged in doing good! We have no wish to go to the cave. The literature given by Indra, who lives longer than the Dēvas, can be found in our holy scriptures.’² If you wish to know of deeds done in the past, do you not look for them in the present birth? Is there anything that cannot be gained by those who lead a life of truthfulness and non-injury?³ Go your way seeking the feet of the God sacred to you. We go the way suited to us.’ After speaking words befitting the occasion to that Brahmana, she spent that day in a resting-place along with Kōvalan who never swerved from his principles.

1 The reference is to the Trivikrama Avatār of Viṣṇu.

2 The Aindra-Vyākaraṇam, according to tradition, belongs to the Paramāgamas of the Jains.

3 The chief Jaina doctrines. Here we may note Kavunti’s reply to the Brahmana who quoted his scriptures. In meeting all his three points she seems to imply that the Jaina scriptures contain these and more.

Then they resumed their journey. One day, the sage Kavunti and the lady of the long dark eyes rested themselves on the way owing to fatigue. From that place frequented (by people), an adjoining pathway branched off, which Kōvalaṇ took and reached a lake and stood on its great bank to slake his thirst. Then the forest-deity¹ passion-lorn and hoping that he might fall in love with her, appeared before him in the form of Vasantamālā. Like a trembling creeper she fell at his feet and shed false tears saying, 'Mātavi told me, "I am not guilty of what I wrote on the fragrant garland. You must have told Kōvalaṇ some falsehood, which made him harsh towards me."' Saying this, she fell in a faint overcome by grief, but (recovering) said, "The worst of all careers is that of a courtesan, shunned like a disease by pious and learned men who avert their faces, and by people who can distinguish right from wrong."² In this way she burst into tears which dropped like pearls from her cool eyes, and with her hands she wrenched her string of lustrous white pearls and scattered them. Forsaken by her, and hearing the news from travellers on their way from the ancient city of Madura, I have come in great distress along with a caravan.³ Generous man, what relief can you give me?'

1 Belief in forest-deities was very usual. They were supposed to assume any form. For instance, the deity that appeared before Kōvalaṇ assumed the guise of Vasantamālā, the maid in attendance on the courtesan Mātavi.

2 See Maṇi., canto xxiv, l. 79. The author ridicules the life of the courtesan by making Mātavi herself condemn it. According to him any decent and self-respecting man looks upon a prostitute as the embodiment of disease.

3 The word śāṭṭa (Sans, sārtha) is a reference to the caravan trade carried on in those days between one part of the country and the other by groups of merchants.

Having been appraised by the distinguished Brahmana that in that dreadful forest there was a luring deity, Kōvalan decided to employ the mantra to disillusion himself about the identity of that lady. The mantra he uttered was the mantra¹ sacred to the goddess riding on the deer,² so that the deity went away confessing,³ 'I that deluded you am a spirit of the forest. Pray do not tell of this misdeed of mine to your wife, lovely as a peacock, or to the holy sage, but go your way.'

Carrying water in a lotus-leaf⁴ to the weary women he relieved them of their distressing thirst. Finding that it was not possible to proceed farther in that desert-region as the rays of the sun ascending the heavens increased in heat, Kōvalan, Kaṇṇaki of the curved ear-rings, and the saint, came upon a flowery grove of the kurava, kadamba, kōṇku and vēṇkai, closely intertwined with one another. There they entered the shrine of Aiyai-kumari⁵ who dwells

1 Another instance of faith and belief in the efficacy of mantras.

2 This goddess is known by other names such as Antari, Śakti, or Āiykalaippāvai. Kōvalan shows here that he was a Śakti-upāsaka, or a devout worshipper of the goddess as Śakti. For a history of the cult see R. G. Bhandarkar, op. cit., pp. 142-6.

3 Here is the deity's confession of guilt. She could not withstand the efficacy of a Vedic mantra.

4 This shows that Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki did not even take a drinking vessel with them.

5 The deity worshipped by the Vaṭuvar or the Maravar. She is known by different names. Cf. Matsya Purāṇa, chap. 154, st. 73-83, where the Creator addresses Vibhāvari the night-deity. In the Hariyamśa there is a hymn to Āpya (Durgā) in which she is represented as the goddess of Śabarās, Pulindas, Barbaras, and other wild tribes, and as fond of wine and flesh. See R. G. Bhanin heaven, whose eye was in Her forehead and who was worshipped by the gods. From those hardy bowmen whose lands were unvisited by rains, and whose bows were therefore their ploughs, and who deprived passers-by of their belongings, she expected sacrificial offerings in return for Her blessing them with victory when, as if guided by Yama, they invaded the neighbouring territory with their cruel bows.

darkar, op. cit., p. 143. Aiyalkōṭṭam was the name of the temple where Korraṇai or the Goddess of Victory was enshrined. She is known as Kāḷi or Mahākāḷi in Sanskrit literature, and we thus see a marvellous blending of two ancient cultures, evolving what is known as the Śakti cult.

CANTO XII

VETTUVA VARI

OR

THE HUNTERS' SONG

THE sun continued to spread his cruel, fierce rays and made it impossible (for the travellers) to go on their journey. She of the fragrant locks of hair (Kaṇṇaki) breathed hard, and her tender feet were red with blisters: so they rested in an unfrequented place in the temple of Aiyai.¹

Later, Cālīni,² born in the family of the Maṛavar who ever had bows in their hands, began her dance with appropriate gestures and became possessed with divinity, her hair standing on end, and her hands raised aloft; she continued to dance moving from one place to another to the wonderment of the foresters, in the maṇram, the common eating-place³ of the Eiyṇar⁴ situated in the midst

1 From the earliest times Aiyai or Korravai has been the favourite deity of hunters in South India. The goddess was worshipped as the Goddess of Victory. Her temple was located in a maṇram in the middle of the village. A maṇram was a common meeting-place for village folk, answering to the public hall of a town today.

2 A woman Possessed with divinity. Generally, an old lady of the family of hunters who considered herself inspired and spoke out as if she were herself a goddess.

3 This points to the custom among the Maṛavar of eating from a common table.

4 The expression in the text for this is ūr-naṭu-maṇram. This implies that there were other maṇrams also.

of the village, encircled by a thorny fence. She then proclaimed aloud their unfulfilled vows thus :

‘The cattle-herds of the towns of your enemies are flourishing : the common places (maṇṇam) of the strong-bowed Eiynar are lying empty : the Eiynar of the Maravar tribe have become meek like persons observing dharma, and no more rob the wealth of passers-by. Unless you render¹ what is due to the goddess riding on ‘the stag,’² She will not send victory to attend your bows, O ye that live by robbery!³ If you desire to live merrily drinking toddy, render your dues.’

From among the ancient family of the Eiynar, who preferred offering their own heads in sacrifice to cremation⁴ (after dying a natural death), a virgin⁵ was chosen

1 The Maravar generally made a vow to their goddess just before an expedition to celebrate their hoped-for victory by a sacrificial offering.

2 Kalittokai, st. 39, ll 12-14.

3 The Maravar were addicted to drinking toddy, and their only occupation was highway robbery.

4 It is remarkable to note that the method of disposal of the dead among this primitive tribe was cremation and not burial. It has been assumed by certain scholars that burial was a custom of the pre-Aryam tribes, and cremation was a later introduction. This statement of Iṅkō-Aṭikaḷ, who lived nearly one thousand eight hundred years before our time, is entitled to respect, and judged by this, it seems that both cremation and burial were as much the institutions of the Aryans as of the pre-Aryans. Both have been prevalent from prehistoric times, and it is impossible to decide which institution is the older.

5 Here we are introduced to the actual method of worship in vogue among these primitive tribes. It was usual to select a virgin from among their community and make her appear like the goddess installed in the shrine. This virgin was taken in procession to the temple of their guardian-deity and worshipped in front to represent the goddess. Her short hair was dressed in the form of a jaṭa (the coiffure of Śiva), and ornamented with a small silver snake and a crescent-like semicircular tooth from wild hog which had destroyed tender plants in well-guarded fields. Her tāli was a necklace made of white teeth plucked from a strong-limbed tiger,¹ and her girdle was a cleaned tiger-skin with mingled spots and stripes on its outer surface. The bow in her hand was of heart-wood. She was mounted upon a stag with twisted horns. The Eiyṇar ladies, who feted her with offerings of dolls, parrots, wild fowls of soft feathers, blue peacocks, balls (pandu) and kaḷaṇku, followed her carrying paints, powders, cool and fragrant pastes, boiled grains, sweets of gingili seeds, rice with meat, flowers, frankincense, and fragrant scents, when she was taken before the shrine of Aṇaṇku who accepts sacrificial offerings in return for victory. This was accompanied by the beating of the drum used during highway robbery, and the blowing of the trumpet, generally heard when looting, the horn and the pipe, and the ringing of the loud bell, simultaneously. There she worshipped Her with the stag for Her mount, and became inspired. Pointing to Kaṇṇaki, of the fragrant locks of hair, standing with weary little feet by

of the shrine, where the goddess was said to appear and approve what the damsel spoke. The commentator Aṭiyārkunallār is not clear here. He seems to take the virgin to be the idol enshrined in the temple itself. This cannot be accepted in the light of ll. 72-3 where it is expressly stated that the Kumari in the shrine blessed the Kumari of the Eiyṇar.

1 The Eiyṇar decked their goddess with ornaments and clothes peculiar to their mores. For instance, a tiger-skin and an elephant-skin formed the clothing of their goddess. Similarly the teeth of the tiger formed her garland. From the description given it is to be understood that their virgin goddess becomes later on the consort of the God Śiva and assumes all His paraphernalia.

the side of her husband, she spake as follows:¹ 'This is the lady of the Koṅkunāṭu, the mistress of the Kuṭamalai (the western hills), the queen of the south Tamil country, and the sprout of her (Kaṇṇaki's) prior penance; she is tirumāmaṇi (literally, the bright jewel) far-famed as the peerless gem of the world.'²

At this Kaṇṇaki smiled a derisive smile and stood modestly behind the broad back of her dear husband thinking that this soothsayer spoke in ignorance.

Just then, She who wore the [moon in Her coiffure, who had an unwinking eye in Her forehead, coral lips, white teeth, a throat darkened by poison,³ who had the serpent Vāsuki of unquenchable ire for Her girdle, and mount Māru for Her shoulder-bangles, whose breasts were enclosed within a bodice resembling a serpent's venomous teeth, and who wore elephant hide for Her upper garment and a lion's (tiger's?) skin for Her petticoat, (appeared), with a trident in Her bangled hands. Her left foot was adorned with cilampu and the right with a victorious anklet. Skilled in sword-fighting, the Lady who stood on the head

1 The inspired Cālīṇi could read the future and therefore foretold what Kaṇṇaki was to become. Neither Kaṇṇaki nor her party realized the implications of these statements and Kaṇṇaki showed that she had no faith in such reports.

2 A note may be made of the significant terms orumāmaṇi, and tirumāmaṇi attributed to Kaṇṇaki by the inspired Cālīṇi. It is not possible to get at the implications of these terms, but it is a remarkable coincidence that the Narīṇai, another Caṅkam classic, refers to the incident of Kaṇṇaki's casting off one of her breasts and uses the expression tirumāmaṇi. Perhaps it was the title given to Kaṇṇaki after she was installed as the Goddess of Chastity. This reference is enough to show that the Narīṇai belongs to the post-Cilappatikāram epoch.

3 Sans., Nilakanṭhi, of the double-bodied broad-shouldered Asura,¹ the goddess worshipped by many, Kumari, Kavuri (Sans., Gauri),² Samari (Sans., Samhārī or the slayer), the holder of the trident, She whose hue is blue, the younger sister of Viṣṇu³ the giver of victory, the holder of the cruel axe, Durgā,⁴ Lakṣhmī, Sarasvatī,⁵ the image adorned with rare gems, the ever-youthful Kumari whom Viṣṇu and Brahmā came to worship, declared the form and attire of the divinity-possessed Kumari quite god-like.

URAIPPĀṬṬUMATAI

(The glory of the courtyard)⁶

In front of the sacrificial altar of the Goddess who sits by the side of the three-eyed God, the nākam and the sweet naraṅtai flowered luxuriantly; everywhere the āccā

1 The deity is named Mahiṣāsuramardani. The Story of the Dēvi who destroyed the demon in the shape of a buffalo is found in almost all the Purāṇas.

2 For an interpretation of the term Gauri, see Dikshitar's article 'Umāgauri' in the Kalaimagal, Vol. III, p. 227 ff.

3 According to literary tradition, as embodied in legends, Durgā is the sister of Viṣṇu. According to the Harivamśa the Dēvi was born to Yaśodā, and when she was dashed against a stone, she attained heaven. Hence she is said to be a sister of Vāsudēva—Kṛṣṇa.

4 Durgā described as Śiva-Śakti.

5 It is remarkable to find a total absence of sectarianism in the Cilappatikāram. Kumari is addressed as Durgā who rode a stag, as Lakṣhmī (Paimtoṭippāvai) and as Sarasvatī (the deity sacred to learning), the respective consorts of the Hindu triad, Śiva, Viṣṇu and Brahmā.

6 These three stanzas are addressed to the glory of the courtyard of the shrine dedicated to Aiyai. It was adorned by a grove of trees bearing flowers of different hues and fragrance.

tree and the sandal rose high: also the se tree and the mango were thick with foliage.

In front of the shrine of Her who wears the crescent in Her coiffure, the vēṅkai tree shed its golden flowers: numerous were the branches of the excellent ilava (cotton) tree. The puṅka let fall its white petals.

In front of the shrine of the younger sister of Viṣṇu, blossomed the kadamba tree, the pātiri, punnai, odorous kuravu, and kōṅku; and on their branches swarms of bees hummed as if playing upon the yāl,

Again,¹

(The Kurava girl said) 'O, how wonderful is the penance of this damsel of golden ornaments who stands here assuming the form and adornment of the Goddess of Victory! The only family worthy of mention is that of the hunter-archers,² in which this damsel of golden bangles was born.

'O, how wonderful is the penance of this damsel with a waist like the hood of a cobra,³ who now stands adorned

1 The editor of the text informs us that, according to some manuscripts, this and the following two stanzas are in the praise of Cālīṅgi engaged in dancing.

2 We get further light on the customs and manners of the Maṇavar. They were great hunters and archers. If we compare their mode of living with the elaborate and luxurious life said to have been led both by town folk and village folk in other parts of the book, we have only to infer that persistence is writ large in the cultural development of the ancient Tamils. Their primitive occupations have been continued down to historical times.

3 The word alkul which occurs frequently in Tamil classics is very difficult to translate. It seems to stand for that part of the abdomen below the navel.

with the decoration of Aiyai! The only family worthy of mention is that family of the Eiynar who used to shoot their arrows, in which she was born.

‘O, how wonderful is the penance of this damsel of lovely bangles who stands with the trappings of Her who rides fast upon the stag! The only family worthy of mention is that family of the Eiynar with bamboo bows, in which this damsel of lovely bangles was born.’

Again,

‘How is it that you, who receive the worship of all gods and stand undaunted as the sprouting wisdom in the Vēda of all Vēdas, once stood upon the dark head of the wild buffalo, clad in a tiger’s skin and covering yourself with an elephant’s skin?

‘How is it that you who stand as the shining light spreading its rays over the lotus-heart of Hari, Hara and Brahmā, also stood upon the stag with the dark-twisted horns, after slaying Mahiṣāsura, holding your sword in your bangled hands?

‘How is it that you who stand praised by the Vēdas as the consort of Him who has an eye in His forehead and the Ganges in His coiffure, stood upon a fierce red-eyed lion,¹ holding a conch and discus in your lotus-hands?’

1. The lion is the steed of Durgā. Legend has it that Vibhāvārī, the Goddess of Night, entered into Umā’s body at the order of the Creator. After Umā’s marriage with Śiva, Vibhāvārī was ordered to leave Umā’s body and reside in the Vindhya hills. Here the Dēvi was given a lion to ride. See Matsya Purāṇa, ch. 157. Treatises on architecture in Sanskrit and the evidence of sculpture testify that the lion was invariably the steed of this goddess as was the stag also. It is but natural that a daughter of

There,¹

With a garland made of the konrai flower and with a shoulder-garment of basil leaves, this damsel in the form of Kumari, began dancing to the delight of the Dēvas, and to the distress of the Asuras.

‘Again,

Sword in hand, and to the repeated tinkling of her metal-filled anklet, her bracelet, and her waist-band all of gold, our Goddess danced the *marakkāl*¹ to vanquish the deceitful Asuras who also bore swords. If She, sword in hand, could perform that dance on the *marakkāl*² to vanquish the deceitful Asuras, who also bore swords, the gods would praise Her of the hue of kāya, and shower flowers on Her with their hands.

At the time when an unrivalled and fierce warrior of a small village sets out to seize the enemy's cattle,³ and is desirous of wearing the veṭci garland,⁴ he invokes the the Great Mountain thick with forests, should have the stag or the lion as her favourite animal.

1 What follows is the dance of victory by Durgā.

2 Arumpatavuraiyāciriyaṛ explains thus: ‘When the Asuras sent illusory reptiles and scorpions over Her, ‘Durgā with wooden legs danced with a spear in Her hand.’ This is called the marakkāl dance of Durgā.

3 Karantai is a theme for recovering a herd of cattle captured by the enemy and is regarded as a declaration of war. Karantaiyaṛ are those warriors who rescue the cattle seized by the enemy. See Tamil Lexicon, p. 743. Here we have to note that cattle-lifting was one of the causes of ancient Tamil warfare.

4 Cf. Pura, veṇpāmālai, ‘Veṭci’, st. 3, where cattle-lifting is under reference. The veṭci garland was a symbolical representation of success over an enemy.

aid of the Goddess who slays with Her shining sword. O if he should desire to wear the veṭci garland and invoke the aid of Her who slays with the bright sword, the king-crow¹ of the forest will send forth its ominous note in the enemy's village.

When the female vendor of toddy² refuses to serve the angry Maravan he will draw his bow, and observing the good omen of birds, start out in search of the enemy's cattle. And at the time when he goes out in search of the enemy's cattle, observing the omen of birds, the Goddess of Victory will raise Her lion-standard and march in front of his bow.³

Again,

'O young maid with lovely teeth, behold! The great herds of cattle, which your elders brought by capture in former times, have filled the courtyards of the blacksmiths,⁴ drummers, and celebrated bards who play on the yāl.

1 The crying of the king-crow is a bad omen. This points to the custom of foretelling future events from the actions of birds. It may be remembered that in ancient Rome there was an augur—a religious official who foretold future events by omens taken from the actions of birds. Such superstitious beliefs were common in the ancient world.

2 The implication is that the Eiy_nar has failed to pay his old dues owing to poverty, because of slackness in his profession which consisted of looting his neighbours' cattle.

3 The flag of aḷi is appropriate to the goddess whose steed was a lion.

4 See Puram., st. 312. Distribution of the captured property was made among blacksmiths, spies, soothsayers, toddy-sellers, bards and drummers. Special mention may be made of the use of spies by the Eiy_nar.

‘O girl with white teeth, behold! The herds of cattle, captured by your elders to the distress of their defenders, have filled the courtyards of the women who sell toddy, of the expert forest spy, and of the soothsayers who interpret bird omens.

‘O girl with eyes smeared with collyrium and like kāya flowers, behold! The big herds of cattle seized by your elders causing distress to the enemy’s villages, have filled the courtyards of the grey-moustached Eiyṇar of unsympathetic speech, and of their old women’

TURAIPPĀṬṬUMATAI¹

*Again,*²

‘We have worshipped your two feet that graciously relieve the suffering of the Dēvas and the Muṇis who roam in company of the sun. Now accept this blood,³ by cutting our necks, as the price of the victory you confer upon the brave and strong Eiyṇar.

1 Turaippāṭṭu is a verse which illustrates minor themes in Akam and Puṇam.

2 This and the following two stanzas are styled avippall by the commentator. Here is an allusion to the tradition that sages like the Vālahīlyas go with the sun as he moves. See Puṇam., st. 43, and Tirumurukā., l. 107 and the commentary thereon. See Matsya Purāṇa, ch. 126, st. 28-45; Brahmāṇṭa Purāṇa, ch. 23. It is said that as many as seven gaṇas including gods and sages followed the sun in his course. The other five are the Nāgas, Yakṣas, Gandharvas, Apsaras, and Rākṣasas.

3 Also Kurutippall; see Aṭiyārkunallār’s gloss.

The idea of a human sacrifice belongs to the primitive neolithic peoples, and it would not be far from the truth to consider these hunters to be the descendants of early neolithic inhabitants of South India. See also F. J. Richards’s article ‘Sidelights on the Dravidian Problem’ in the Q.J.M.S., Vol. VI, pp. 156-201.

‘We have worshipped the lotus-feet of you who are like a blue gem, and who are worshipped by the gods along with their crowned king. Accept the flesh and blood offered to you as the price of the great victory you confer upon the Eiy_nar, in their seizure of herds of cattle.

‘O Kumari! Accept the blood of sacrifice¹ at your altar in fulfilment of the oath made, touching your feet, by the tiger-like Eiy_nar, who sally forth in the dead of night, with tui, the small parai, and the pipe, sounding as if to pierce the sky.’

THE OFFERING OF SACRIFICE²

‘O Śankari, Antari, Nīli, who wear in your coiffures the red-eyed serpent along with the crescent! Accept this sacrifice from the Eiy_nar with strong bows and arrows, and in answer to our prayer grant that travellers³ may come oftener that (by robbing them) we may increase our riches.

‘O you, who blessed the Dēvas, who had to face death in spite of having drunk nectar! O you, who are immortal even though you drank the poison which can be drunk by on one, eat this offering made by us, the heartless Eiy_nar, who enter neighbouring villages when all are sleeping, and sound our tutis before we plunder them.

1 It is evident that the time of sacrifice and worship by these hunters was the dead of night, when the whole world was sleeping.

2 The following three stanzas describe the actual offering of sacrifice.

3 These hunters pray for the prosperity of travellers because they are one source of their livelihood.

‘O you, who blessed all by kicking the rolling wheel sent in disguise by your uncle (Kamsā)¹ and walked through the maruta tree,² accept this offering given as your due, by us the ungrateful Eiyṇar, who know nothing but how to rob people of their wealth and cause³ unhappiness.’

Again,

May the Pāṇṭyan greedy for victory, and the Lord of the lofty, fertile Potiyil hill where dwells the sage next in rank to Brahmā⁴ who gave us the Vēdas, wear the veṭci flower in his crown leading to the ruin of his enemy's camp and of the defence of their cattle.

1 For a version of this legend see the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, Bk. X, ch. 7, st. 6-7. Kamsā sent an Asura in the form of a rolling wheel which the baby Kṛṣṇa kicked, and broke to pieces.

2 ibid, ch. 10, st. 23 ff. The reference is to two Gandharvas who became two arjuna trees by the curse of Nārada. Kṛṣṇa, being a mischievous baby, was one day tied to a mortar by his mother. With that he ran between the two trees, making them prostrate on the earth. This relieved both the Gandharvas from the curse of the sage. The Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bk. V. ch. 6, st. 12-17, gives a slightly different version of this incident as also of the breaking of the wheel by Kṛṣṇa.

3 Cf. Kalittokai, st. 15, where this very line occurs as if one is a copy of the other.

4 Agastya was born after Brahmā according to Aṭṭiyarkunallār. But the Arumpatavural says that he was born after Mahēśvara. Naccinārkkiniyar is unable to accept this view. See Maturaikkāṇṇi, ll. 40-2, commentary. See also Matsya Purāṇa (ch. 61, st. 17 f.), where he is said to have been born from a pitcher and as a brother of Vasiṣṭha.

CANTO XIII

PURANCERI IRUTTA KATAI

OR

THE SUBURBS OF MADURA

AFTER the departure of Cālīṇi, the female religious dancer, Kōvalaṇ paid his respects to the feet of the first among saints (Kavunti) and said:

‘This girl cannot stand the scorching rays of the sun: and her tender feet can no more endure the gravel of this barren region. As this is the kingdom of the Pāṇṭyan of the righteous sceptre,¹ whose fame has spread far in all directions, the fierce bear will not hunt the terrible ant-hill,² the striped tiger will not be at enmity with the deer; the reptile, the malignant spirit, the crocodile in search of its prey, and thunder will cause no distress to friends. Instead of travelling by daylight, we can cross this forest by night in the light of the moon who protects many living beings.³ We will suffer no harm.’

The saint accepted the suggestion with approval.

1 The poet ironically makes Kōvalaṇ refer to the righteous sceptre of the Pāṇṭyan when he first enters the city of Madura where, later, injustice is done to him.

2 Notice the author's correct knowledge of the habits of animals. It is said that the bear eats from the purru. The implication here is that even wild animals behaved righteously in the Pāṇṭyan kingdom.

3 The days were so hot that night travelling was preferred.

Before these travellers, who awaited the departure of the cruel sun like the subjects of a tyrannical king,¹ appeared the ancestor of the Pāṇṭyas,² the moon, with his retinue of stars, spreading his milk-white rays, when Mother Earth heaved a deep sigh and fell asleep after expressing pity (on Kaṇṇakī) in the words :

‘Dear girl, up to this time thou hast not suffered either the starlike necklace or the sandal-paste to adorn thy young breasts; thou hast not permitted thy locks of hair to be dressed with the flower-dust-laden lily linked up in a chain with other flowers; thou hast not allowed thy body, soft as a tender shoot, to be decorated with garlands, made from the fresh petals of many a flower. Art thou now attracted by the south wind, born in the Malaya hills, nourished in Madura and ever on the tongues of poets, blowing over thee, and by the spring moon shedding his milk-white rays copiously upon thee?’

Kōvalan said to his wife, fatigued by the journey: ‘This night,³ the tiger will cross our path, the owl will

1 Cf. Perumkatai, Bk. LII. canto i, l. 81; also Perumpāṇāruppāṭal, ll. 42-3. The subjects of a cruel king look forward anxiously to the departure of their monarch.

2 Tradition attributes the Pāṇṭyan dynasty to a branch of the lunar race. See Cila., canto iv, l. 22. Recent investigations have not thrown much light on the origin of this ancient dynasty, which is certainly more ancient than the visit of Megasthenes to India. Ktesias refers to a people called Pandore, while Clitarchus and Megasthenes call them Māndi (Pāndai?). See Ancient India by J. N. McCrindle, Frag. XXX. In the present state of our knowledge the theory of an indigenous origin of the dynasty lacks much force and can be said to be inconclusive. See Studies in Tamil Literature and History, p. 179, for their probable origin.

3 According to Aṭṭyārkkunallār, this day was the last day of the month of Aṇi (June-July).

screech, the bear will make a thundering sound; but walk fearlessly on.' He placed her fair arms shining with bangles to rest upon his shoulders.

Then they passed through the forest listening to the righteous words of all-knowing¹ and venerable Kavunti, till a wild fowl, dwelling in a thicket of bamboos which had been scorched by the hot sun, announced the approach of dawn.

(At that time) they reached a village inhabited by Brahmanas,² who wore the sacred thread but who were given to music and dancing, having fallen from the Vedic life.³ Kōvalan lodged the holy saint and his loving wife

1 She was well read in works of dharma. Evidently Sanskrit learning had come to stay in the Tamil land much earlier than is generally supposed.

2 A community of Brahmanas, but coming low in the social hierarchy. They are said to be ambaṇavar who took to the profession of acting and dancing. As they did not pursue their svadharma society regarded them as socially inferior. The position which the Brahmana held in society in the age of the Cankam classics is clear. There was the Vedic Brahmana engaged in reading and teaching the Vēdas and also in performing Vedic sacrifices. He evoked respect from every one. There was the laukika Brahmana who strayed from the prescribed path and took to professions other than those enjoined by the law of the land. In the Akanānūru (st. 24) we have the expression vēlappārppāṇ meaning Brahmana engaged in making bangles. Among the laukikas come the ambaṇavar also. The term ūrpārppāṇ in South Indian Inscriptions is another reference to the laukika members of the Brahmana community. This only shows that in addition to the Vedic Brahmanas there also existed Brahmanas who took to worldly professions, and to whom society did not give the same status as that enjoyed by Vedic Brahmanas.

3 Cf. Kuraḷvenpā, 133-4.

in a harmless place; and crossing a fence of thorns, he passed along a great road in search of water for his morning ablutions. (On his way) he recalled the journey in that forest alongside his wife and sighed heavily like a bellows. His grief burnt within him. Even his form looked altered, and clouded the vision of Kauśikaṇ¹, who, without recognizing him, addressed the green-leaved kuṟukkatti in whose shade he was standing: 'O *mātavi*² plant, with all thy flowers fallen down, unable to bear the heat of summer, thou seemest to be distressed, even like the flower-like Mātavi of long eyes who has fallen into deep affliction unable to bear Kōvalaṇ's separation from her.'

Kōvalaṇ who was listening to these words of the Brahmana Kauśikaṇ asked, 'What is it you are saying?' The young Kauśikaṇ went up to him and exclaimed: 'There need be no more anxiety: I have found him.' He then narrated all that had happened in Pukār, as follows: his (Kōvalaṇ's) wealthy father and pious mother are like a serpent that has lost its priceless jewel; his near relations have drowned themselves in an ocean of sorrow like bodies deprived of their souls; his servants have departed to different regions determined to find him out and bring him (Kōvalaṇ) back; the very city of Pukār of ancient fame

1 The commentator interprets Kōśikaṇ as Bandikōśikaṇ. It may also be Bandakauśikaṇ. Apparently this Brahmana belonged to the well-known Kauśika gōtra. The suffix māṇi in l. 56 shows that he was a bachelor and still in the first stage of life (āśrama). Both terms Kōśikaṇ and Kauśikaṇ are used.

2 Kuṟukkatti is the mātavi plant, and the reference to paśalai or green leaves shows that the season was summer. The mātavi plant is compared to the courtesan Mātavi. The distress to the plant is caused by the departure of spring, and to the courtesan by the departure of Kōvalaṇ.

has gone mad—like Ayōdhyā¹ at the separation of the great hero (Rāma) who (left it and) penetrated the thick jungles saying, ‘To me the kingdom is nothing, but my father’s command is everything’;—Mātavi who heard (the news) from Vasantamālā’s lips, lost her colour and turned green, and fell in a swoon upon the decorated bed in the bedchamber in the middle part of her tall mansion. Kauśikan then continued: ‘Much moved by her extreme agony I went to console her,² when that sorrow-stricken lady said: “I prostrate myself before your feet; kindly see that I suffer no more.” She then wrote out a message with her tender hands and gave it to me saying, “Please hand this sealed palm-leaf³ to him who is as dear to me as the jewel of my own eye.” He, the performer of Vēdic sacrifices, concluded by saying that he went to several places aimlessly with that message.

He said all this in good faith, and placed in Kōvalan’s hands the leaf, given him by the grief-stricken creeper-like Mātavi, with the flowerbuds in her hair. The seal

1 The capital of Daśaratha, king of Ayōdhyā, presented a deserted appearance at the news of Rāma’s entering the forest under the orders of his father. (See Rāmāyaṇa, ‘Ayōdhyā’, ch. 48.) This shows that the epic tradition of the Rāmāyaṇa had become popular in the Tamil land in the early centuries of the Christian era.

2 It was the Brahmana Kauśikan who brought Mātavi’s message to Kōvalan. In those days it seems to have been a custom for Brahmanas to have free entry into the women’s apartments, and give succour to them whenever they needed aid. Also Brahmanas were sent on errands either for the state or on private business.

3 The message was written on a palm-leaf. It was sealed before it was handed over. It is known as candirakam, with an ōla envelope to an ōla letter, shaped in the form of a ring. (See Tamil Lexicon, p. 1268.) That the sealing of letters was common is also evident.

reminded him of the fragrance of her tresses which she had dressed with perfumed oil during his stay with her, and he was therefore loath to break it open. But as he opened the palm-leaf, he read these words :¹

‘My Lord, I fall prostrate before your feet. Kindly forgive my indiscreet words. What is my mistake which made you leave (our city) during the night with your wife of noble birth, even without the knowledge of your parents? My mind suffers in ignorance. Please relieve me. O great and true one of exquisite wisdom, may you bless me!’

When he had read these words he felt, ‘She is not in the wrong; I alone am to blame’, and gave Kauśikaṇ back (the message) as if to explain his departure, saying ‘The contents of this sealed letter are quite fit to be seen by my faultless parents. I bow at their lotus-feet. O young Kauśikaṇ, show it to them so that they may cease to be anxious about me and be free from their agony. Please go.’

Afterwards he went back to the place where the holy, righteous Kavuntī was staying with his faultless and chaste wife, and there he joined the company of bards who were singing (in praise of) Durgā’s valorous dance. He took up the *sengoōṭṭi yāl*² and sounding the sentiram,³ he

1 This is Mātavi’s message. The implication is that she had done nothing to cause his final departure or separation from her. Even if she had committed a fault, she suggests that it was no greater than his own mistake in leaving his residence and city without the permission and knowledge of his aged parents. Her letter was so convincing that Kōvalaṇ thought it fit to redirect it to his parents to keep them informed of his situation.

2 One of the four kinds of yāl (see Intro., p. 61).

3 Sentiram constituted of paṇ (śampūraṇam), paṇṇiyarriṇam (śāḍavam), tīram (auḍavam) and tīratṭīram (caturttam). See Aṭiyārkkunallār’s gloss, p. 349.

fastened up tantirikaram and tivavu,¹ joined properly parru with the existing orruruppu,² tied up the strings starting from ulai and ending with kaikkilai, tested carefully with his ear the *āsāṇṇi*³ of *pāṭarpāṇi*⁴ sacred to Durgā, at three places (tāṇam) according to well recognized conventions;⁵ and after playing the pāṭarpāṇi with those pāṇar, he asked them the distance from there to Madura (Kūṭal).

They replied: 'Do you not feel here the south wind blowing from Madura? It is mingled with the divinely fragrant, thin soft mixture made up of the black akil paste, the odorous kunkumam flower, civet, the excellent sandal-paste, and the paste made from the musk of deer. On its way it rests for a while in the newly-opened flower-buds of the pollen-laden water-lily, maidenly campakam, mātavi petals, jasmine (mallikai), and home-grown mullai. It then mixes with the smoke rising from kitchens, the smoke of the broad bazaar where numbers of cooks fry cakes in pans, the fragrant fumes rising from terraces where live men and women, the smoke of sacrificial offerings, and various other sweet fumes. It finally issues with innumerable and indistinguishable odours from the palace of the conquering Pāṇṭyan wearing (Indra's garland⁶ on his broad chest,

1 Two of the six limbs of the śenkōṭṭi yāl.

2 Orru was a limb of the śenkōṭṭi yāl and orruruppu is probably a fret.

3 Four kinds of āsāṇ: Gāṇḍāram, Śikaṇṭi, Daśākari, and Śuddagāṇḍāram.

4 Here was a mixing up of paṇ and tīram. See above, canto vii, st. 24.

5 This clearly demonstrates that Kōvalaṇ was a master-musician and was equal to experts in his knowledge of playing the lute.

6 For the tradition of the Pāṇṭyan wearing Indra's garland see above, canto xi, ll. 24-5.

and fills all places with its oppressive perfume. This is much unlike the south wind coming from the Potiyil hills, which is often praised by the unfaltering tongues of (Caṅkam) poets.¹ Therefore that prosperous city is not very far from here. Though you go alone, none will obstruct you.'²

Afterwards Kōvalaṇ and Kaṇṇaki began their journey by night, as previously, in company with the lady of great penance. On their way they heard the thundering sounds of the morning drum,³ beaten with great eclat in the great temple of Śiva and other gods, and in the celebrated palace of the far-famed king; (they further heard) the chanting according to established rules by Brahmanas who knew the four Vēdas,⁴ and the speech of penance-performers engaged in instruction. (They also heard) the usual daily sound of the muḷavu in honour of the king's sword-warriors⁵ who would not return from the field without victory, the uproar of war-elephants captured in battle, the screams of wild elephants captured in the

1 The reference here is to Caṅkam poets who have sung the glories of the Potiyil in many a song. This establishes the antiquity of the Caṅkam as an institution regarded so even in the days of the Cilappatikāram.

2 This indicates the hospitality offered to aliens in ancient Madura.

3 Drums were usually beaten in the morning both in the temple and at the palace.

4 Vedic chanting was usually heard everywhere in the mornings. Is it a reference to the chanting of Sattram-Yajur-Āruṇam?

5 This may be a reference to a festival of arms. The playing on muḷavu is said to be a daily function and is generally in honour of soldiers who fought to the end without retreating from the field of battle.

forests, the neighing of horses standing in line, the beat of the kiṇai drums¹ at daybreak by dancing minstrels, and other tumultuous noises arising from Madura, all of which rivalled the roaring of the dark sea. These noises seemed to welcome the travellers and made them forget all their miseries.

The divine damsel, by name Vaikai, who is ever on the tongues of the poets, celebrated by them for her right conduct in offering protection to the world, and who belongs to the Pāṇṭyas, resembled a flawless noble² maiden with robes of different flowers³ fallen from the date-palm, vaḷuḷam, red cotton tree, vēṅkai, white kaṭampam, nākam, tilakam, marutam, jasmine, pear tree, the tall cam-pakam, and pāṭalam; with her banks the zone of her broad alkul, studded with kuruku, golden jasmine, musuṇṭai with thick creeper, blossoming wild jasmine (atiral), the white kūtāḷam, kuṭasam, vediram, luxuriant pakaṇṇai creepers, piṭavam and Arabian jasmine closely intermingled; flowery islets—being accumulations of sand, facing one against the other, and richly covered by many flower trees growing thickly on their sides—her young and beautiful breasts; the red flowery tree shedding its flowers on her banks, her red mouth, and the mullais brought by the current, her lovely teeth; the carps that frisked along,

1 Kiṇainilai is the theme of the song in praise of a Vellāḷa chief to the accompaniment of a kiṇai drum. It was generally performed by dancing minstrels called kiṇaiḥporunar.

2 The term poyyā applied to the river means it was ever-flowing. And these waters prevented alien kings from entering the Pāṇṭyan capital. It was a kind of nadidurga or river-fortress.

3 The river Vaikai is described as a lady, wearing flower-robes, her banks representing her girdle, islets her breasts, mullais her teeth, carps her eyes, and the flowing water her wavy hair.

hiding and revealing themselves alternately, her long eyes; the flowing water, never without odorous flowers, her tresses.¹

She (the Vaikai) covered herself with the holy robes of sweet flowers and restrained the flow of tears that filled her eyes² as if she knew the trouble in store for youthful Kaṇṇaki.

Kaṇṇaki and Kōvalaṇ who had followed a foot-path through the forest (reached the river and) praised it extravagantly saying,³ 'O this is no stream of waters, but a stream of flowers.' They avoided the great thronged landing-stages where all the different boats were moored; some shaped like horses, some like elephants and others like lions.⁴ Instead, they crossed over the river on a raft, accompanied by the saint, to a fragrant grove full of beauteous flowers on the southern bank.

They regarded it as an act of great merit to circum-ambulate the city, the dwelling-place of gods, and they went round the moat enveloped by the indestructible forest of defence.⁵ At that time, the dark water-lily, āmpal, and the lotus, as if they understood for certain the unparalleled

1 Aral may mean thin black sand, or flowing water. Both are generally compared to the curls of ladies' hair.

2 Here the Vaikai is compared to a lady sympathizing with Kaṇṇaki's future.

3 The river Vaikai was worshipped by the three travellers as the divine stream. Cf. Sītā worshipping the Ganges and other rivers when she was leaving for the Daṇḍaka forest.

4 Rafts of logs were also not uncommon. Evidently boat-building as an industry was in existence.

5 A forest which served as a defence surrounded the moat encircling the city fortress.

trouble in store for Kaṇṇaki and her husband, seemed to quake with grief (represented) by the waving of their stems¹ and their eyes filled with tears, while the bees that rested (in them) seemed to produce a mourning note in a spirit of sympathy. Lofty flags that² were set upon the outer wall of the fortress in commemoration of victory over enemies, seemed to say by a deprecating wave of hands 'Do not come (into the city).'

The travellers passed through fertile paddy fields filled with birds and groves and entered the suburbs of the ancient city-fortress,³ inhabited by none other than the men practising dharma, with residential quarters intersected by streams of fresh floods, lakes of expansive waters, fruit-bearing coconuts, plantain trees, areca palms, and bamboo sheds⁴ for supplying water.

1 Their shaking is caused by the wind waving their stems, and the tears are drops of honey.

2 The capture of the flags of the enemy was a sign of victory. After capture they were usually fixed on the outer wall of the fortress. The flag waving its hands means that the wind blew against it and thus seemed to urge the travellers to go back.

3 The suburbs near the forest wall (purañcēri) were the residential quarters of the penance-performers, ascetics and other sādhus.

4 This shows that rest-houses were erected at important places for travellers and the chief material used for such buildings was bamboo. Cf. Aśoka's inscriptions where this emperor is said to have built rest-houses on the roads.

CANTO XIV
URKAN KATAI

OR

SEEING THE CITY

To the singing of birds in the suburban groves, in the tracts of shining water, and in the paddy fields bent with the weight of crops, the sun, an object of worship by the whole world, made the lotus in the lake open its petals, and awoke to the morning half-light the inhabitants of lofty Madura of the Pāṇṭyan who held the sword that made his enemy's heads tremble. At that time the thunder of the morning drum rose high accompanied by the blowing of the white conch from the temples¹ of Śiva with the forehead eye, of Viṣṇu with the Garuḍa standard, of Baladēva with the plough, and of Subrahmaṇya with the cock-flag, and from the residences² of those proclaiming dharma,³ as well as from the palace of the victorious king.⁴

1 Cf. Maṇi., canto v, l. 54.

2 The terms used in the text to denote a temple are kōil, niyamam, nakaram, kōṭṭam and paṭṭi. The last term, paṭṭi is invariably used in connexion with Jaina temples.

3 Cf. Maṇi., canto i, ll. 54-5. For an explanation of the term aratturai see Kuralvenpā 41, et seq. The turai of turavaram constitutes carya, kriya, yōga and jñānam : the means of attaining yōga are eightfold. (See Tolk., 'Puratt.', sūtra 20 and the commentary of Naccinārkkinīyar thereon).

4 The turai of maṇam is sevenfold : veṭci, karantai, vañci, kāñci, nocci, uliñai, and tumpai. See Pura., venpāmālai. The reference here is to seven kinds of conquest. Cf. Studies in Tamil Literature and History, pp. 239-42.

Kōvalan went to make obeisance with his hands to the saint Kavunti and said:¹ 'O saint distinguished for great penance, as one who has strayed from the righteous path, I am in the abject condition of seeing this girl, tender as a flower, suffer great pain by wandering through unknown lands. Until I return after informing the princely merchants² of this ancient city about my situation, this lady of mine will be under your protection.³ Have you any objection to that, O holy saint?'

To this Kavunti replied: 'Because your good deeds in past births are exhausted, you and your lady-love now experience unequalled distress. Though virtuous men proclaim eloquently with the drumstick of their tongues on the drum of their mouths, "Avoid the path of unrighteousness; if not, it will lead to bitter reaction," still those who are by nature bad will not take this precept to heart. But when an evil deed brings its own reaction, they become maddened excessively by misery born of ignorance. On the other hand wise and learned people will not grieve when the unavoidable reaction of past karma shows itself.

'The suffering at parting from one's love, the suffering leading to the union of lovers, and the suffering caused by the formless god (Cupid) visit only those who enjoy the love of curly-headed maidens, and not sages who lead a life of celibacy. Many in the world have fallen into dire distress by regarding women and food as objects of pleasure, and seeing this, sages have relinquished the desire for 1 A confession by Kōvalan of his guilt.

2 Literally, Valsyas next in rank to the Kṣatriya caste.

3 Here Kōvalan seems to imply that Kappaki was already under the protection of Kavunti and was to continue so.

both. Not only now but many times in the past man has been entrapped by the wiles of a love based on desire and endless suffering. Do you not know that he¹ who went with his wife (into the forest) on the command of his father (Daśaratha) and suffered great agony at her (subsequent) separation, was the father of Him who revealed the Vēdas?² Is it not a long-remembered fact?

'He (Naḷa) lost his kingdom in a gambling court³ and penetrated the deep forest in company with his tender wife.⁴ Neither was he devoid of love for her, nor was she a woman of bad and low nature. Was not Fate hard that he went away in the dead of night leaving her in the wild jungle?⁵ Can you say that any accused her (Damayanti) of any fault? You are not like them, for have you not enjoyed union with your pretty wife? Do not grieve: but go to the king's city, 'Madura, and return when you have found a suitable (dwelling) place.'

Kōvalan then went through a street above a narrow passage (suranga)⁶ constructed to admit groups of ele-

1 Another statement to demonstrate that the Rāmāyaṇa was well known in South India at this time.

2 This refers to the legend that when Viṣṇu was engaged in yoganidrā Brahmā the Creator came out of his navel. Hence Brahmā was the son of Viṣṇu and was the giver of the Vēdas.

3 Vallāḍāyam (Sans., dyūtam).

4 The reference is to the story of Naḷa and Damayanti, which is the theme of the Naiṣadha Kāvya, 5 Naḷa left Damayanti in the forest in a half-naked condition in the dead of night (Mhb., 'Vana Parvan,' ch. 62). This also shows that the story of the Mahābhārata was popular in the Tamil land (see 'Naḷopākhyānaparvan' for the full story).

6 It may be remembered that this word suranga is important as determining the authenticity of the Arthaśāstra. See The Mauryan Polity, pp. 16-17.

phants with their long trunks, leading from the moat with its vast expanse of sparkling waters, encircled by a well-guarded defence forest.¹ Unsuspected by the ranks of the best Yavana swordsmen² who guarded it, he next entered the forest-gate, where flags waved in the westerly breeze, and saw the interior (of the city) glittering like the opened jewel-box of thousand-eyed Indra.

In the streets³ he saw courtesans, lost to all shame and chastity, accompanying their rich lovers to the pleasure garden with its tall maruta trees⁴ on the banks of the swelling Vaikai, and on white sand dunes. He also saw them engaged in water-sports, in boats with high cabins and in canoes, swimming and holding on to the rafts.⁵

He saw, besides, in a grove of the ancient city which appeared like a golden creeper, courtesans gracefully placing cool fragrant mullais, water-lilies, and neytals with

1 Iḷai is the defensive wall of a fortress and mīlai is the forest zone encircling the moat surrounding a citadel.

2 Aṭiyārkunallār speaks of them as Turks. It may possibly be a reference to Greeks. But to the natives of ancient India all foreigners were Yavanas. They were employed by Tamil kings for military service.

3 A description of the interior of the city. The rest of the canto shows Kōvalaṇ going through the principal streets.

4 It would appear that there was a special place which went by the name of tirumarutanturai. The Kalittokai also makes a reference to it. These reference show that that place was a public park. See Maturaikkāñci, I. 356.

5 Boats and rafts of different descriptions were used to cross the rivers. The names given are nirmāḍam, nāvai, and puṇai. Some of them were covered and some open. The puṇai was an open raft. People either swam holding on to it or they sat on it and crossed.

open petals in their hair which was already dressed with long wreaths of white flowers, jasmine, viriyal, and the pollen of the cool red lily; and fastened with pearls from the great harbour of Korkai.¹ (They were further seen) anointing their bodies with luxurious sandal-paste from the southern Malaya hills.

At nightfall he saw maidens on their flower-strewn beds in the moonlit terraces where their lovers banished their fatigue (by recalling their experiences in the different seasons of the year).² (During the rainy season, they said,) when the king, of the clouds appeared with the north wind, decorated the noisy city of Madura in red (cevvaṇi),³ and showed to her (Madura) the king of Gods (Indra) who had clipped the wings of mountains with his

1 Korkai was one of the great ports of that time. It was noted for excellent pearl-fisheries. See Maturaikkāñci, ll. 134 and 144. Probably Ptolemy's Kolkhoi was Korkai (McCrindle, op. cit., p. 57 ff.). The site of this town is now about five miles inland, where a new emporium arose. This was the Kayal of Marco Polo who visited it in the thirteenth century. (See Travels of Marco Polo, ed. by Sir Henry Yule, Vol. II., pp. 372-3.) There is a clear reference to the pearls and to the port in the Kauṭaliya Arthaśāstra.

2 The poet describes the life led by men and women in the city during the six different seasons of the year—the rainy season, the cold season, the season of early dew, the season of late dew, spring and summer. These are known in Sanskrit as Varṣar̥tu, Śiśīr̥tu, Hēmantar̥tu, Śarat̥tu, Vasantam, and Grīṣmam. When Kovalan entered the city it was the middle of summer.

3 Cevvaṇi is a term of much importance in Akapporuḷ. If during his wife's menstrual period the hero spent his time with a courtesan, the custom was for the confidante to appear before him dressed entirely in red. The hero then returned home. Perhaps Iḷanko took Madura to be the confidante, Indra to be the hero, and the women of Madura to be the heroines.

thunderbolt,¹ they (the ladies of the city) wore in their waists scarlet silk with flower-work thereon, adorned their tresses (already dressed with flower-buds) with wild olive; adorning them further with the fragrant and fresh-blown kurin̄ci and red tāḷi flowers which grew on the slopes of the Cirumalai hills. (They then) painted their breasts with red sandal-paste, and further beautified them with garlands of coral, and garlands of the curved petals of red Cenkōtu flowers.

During the cold season modest damsels and their lovers, who had painted their chests with fragrant pastes, seated themselves in front of the censer charged with the wood of incense trees, and closed the lattice windows² (of their apartments) in mansions seeming to reach the sky, built by expert architects.³

During the season of early dew, ladies sat with their lovers on the moonlit terraces of their big houses, to receive the warmth of the rising sun, who appeared with his expanding rays on the southern horizon dispelling the white clouds.

1 This legend is well known in Sanskrit literature. Tradition has it that mountains once had wings and consequently flew from one place to another. Then Indra had their wings clipped. Some of them in fear hid themselves in the deep waters of the ocean. See the Rāmāyaṇa, 'Sundara', ch. 1.

2 These were windows peculiar to those days. See Studies in Tamil Literature and History, pp. 263-4. It is of absorbing interest to note similar institutions in the Indus Valley during the chalcolithic period. In the Annual Report, 1928-9 of the Archaeological Survey of India, the remark is made that no windows have been discovered in the Mohenjo-daro buildings excavated. 'In all probability there were only simple ventilation holes just beneath the ceilings of the rooms.'—Report, p. 69.

3 Arumpatavuralyāśiriyār refers to a treatise on architecture entitled Mayamatam.

(The lovers continued to talk, asking) where is the king (the season) of late dew in the month Paṅkuni, who would witness the festival of the Bow sacred to hard-hearted Cupid (Neṭuvē!)¹ in the Pāṇṭyan city and enter with the east wind and with a fleet of high, broad ships, carrying different kinds of incense, silks, sandals, scents, and camphor brought as tribute, from Toṇṭi?²

Moreover, where else can we see the king of spring, who unites joyful lovers in the Pāṇṭyan city, bringing with him the south wind from the Potiyil hills of Tennavan, giving māṭavi creepers luxuriant growth and filling groves and jungles with fragrant flowers?

In this way creeper-like ladies rested with their husbands recalling the different seasons.

(Continuing, they said) on the last day when the king of spring reigning over Madura considered removing to other places, the continuously hot sun and the westerly breeze, entered (the city) and scorched the entire jungle

1 Vilvīḷa is the festival in honour of the God of Love. Neṭuvē!, literally, means 'The Great Vē!' or one who kindles eternal desire. The festival is generally held in the month of Paṅkuni in the season of late dew. In the Tamil land the festival is still celebrated in that month. See Kuruntokai, st. 31.

2 This Toṇṭi must have been a great port, belonging to the Cōla, or more probably the Pāṇṭyan kingdom. This must not be confused with Toṇṭi, another port in the dominion of the Cēras. See Puṛam., st. 17 and 48. The tribute offered by the chief of Toṇṭi in ships was akil, silks, garlands, scents, and camphor. Most of these came from the Archipelago Islands in the east. For detailed comments on these articles see the gloss of Aṭiyārkunallār. The Cilappatikāram says that ships entered with koṇṭal or the east wind. If it is a reference to Cēra Toṇṭi, koṇṭal would not have been mentioned. Perhaps this Toṇṭi can be identified with a place of the same name in the present Ramnad district.

and hilly tracts, making herds of elephants and their young ones tremble; wealthy maidens (wearing golden bangles) completely loyal to the king, embraced him anew and received from him as presents covered carts, palanquins, sleeping-couches with jewelled legs, physical happiness in the pleasure-gardens,¹ kauri fans of yaks' tails, golden betel-boxes, and sharp swords. These maidens drank sweet wine from pure golden goblets held by their maid-servants and became inebriated. When trying to drive away with their fragrant flower-garlands striped bees² (that had settled on them), they hit places where the bees were not. In smiling they showed their pear-like teeth through their red lips and sang words of praise which they had not sung during their separation (pulavi); but when they began the eight modes of singing,³ their tongues failed and provoked only laughter in their hearers. The extremities of their long carplike eyes, red like the opened buds of a bright Cenkaḷunīr flower, bespoke their anger, while perspiration gathered on their tiny foreheads, bearing the tilaka, and their murderous bow-like eye-brows curved downwards, all of which was longingly observed by men of noble families. In this way these women afforded amusement to the ruler of the earth.

1 Tam., uyyānam; Sans., udyāna. This refers to the king's concubines to whom he occasionally made presents, such as those mentioned.

2 The women drank so much that their eyes became reddened and deceived the bees into thinking that they were not eyes but honey-laden flowers.

3 Kaṭṭurai constitutes eight kinds of song if the reading is எட்டுக்கு. But the reading எட்டுக்கும் may be conveniently substituted. It would then mean that they tried to speak but their words stuck in their throats.

(After passing this street) Kōvalan went through the highway with its double row of¹ beautiful mansions which crowned kings frequented secretly. These were the residences of courtesans who had never been punished with the carrying of burnt tiles,² and of dancers who knew the technique of the two musical conventions, vēttiyaḷ and *potuviyaḷ*³ and had perfect knowledge of the four⁴ characteristics (of dancing),⁵ songs, time-beats, the music of bagpipes accompanied by musical instruments made of leather used in the dancing theatre. They also knew of the much renowned talaikkōḷ and of the sweet and seven-fold strains, and were accompanied by the *tōriyamaṭantaḷ*⁶ who sang the vāram, by the girl who sang the opening song and by the girl who sang the middle song and who

1 The double rows are probably śrutaṇam (residences of the middle classes) and perutaṇam (residences of the wealthy classes).

2 This may mean that they were living in lofty houses built of burnt bricks and tiles. Another meaning (adopted here) is that the courtesans were free from the punishment of bearing tiles. The custom was to inflict this punishment on anybody who swerved from the prescribed conventions. The damsel had to walk round the city in procession bearing seven tiles on her head. To this disgrace the courtesans of Madura were not subjected.

3 Both these are known as Vacaikkūttu. See Maṇi., canto ii, i, 18. While vēttiyaḷ was intended for royalty, potuviyaḷ was a popular performance (see Arumpatavuraḷ).

4 The paṇ was fourfold, pālai, kuṟṇāci, marutam and śevvaḷi.

5 Vari is of seven kinds. It may also refer to the seven strings beginning with kural.

6 The tōriyamaṭantaḷ was an aged dancing girl who sung the vāram to the accompaniment of a dance by a young girl. She was assisted by two more girls, talaippāṭṭukkūṭṭi initiating the song, and the īṭaippāṭṭukkūṭṭi helping in the middle by singing.

acted in four different entertaining ways, and (when singing) reached the eighth (note) for which she was rewarded every day with gifts ranging from one to 1008 kaḷañcus of gold.

Caught in the eye-nets of these goddess-like damsels (aṇāṅku),¹ even religious men, take leave of their disciplined senses, while young people dallying carnally with girls like bees sucking honey from flower after flower, and new initiates to the revelries of Cupid, will not leave those mansions, without listening to the girls' songs, and to the parrot-like talk of the women skilled in the sixty-four arts.²

Kōvalaṇ then saw in the bazaar,³ covered carts and other vehicles,⁴ ornamented chariots, coats of mail, attractive goads, gloves used in warfare, efficacious medicines, curved bludgeons, white furry fans, pig-faced shields, leather shields, shields with a picture of the forest on them, machines fitted with spears,⁵ workers in copper, bronze-workers, newly-made ropes, garland-makers, saws made of steel, instruments for ivory cutting, burning incense

1 Aṇāṅku corresponds here to the Mōhinī of Sanskrit Literature.

2 The sixty-four arts are elaborately given in the Kāmasūtr, of Vātsyāyana.

3 What we call kaṭāṅgu streets in modern Indian cities. These are shops of wholesale dealers. Four such are mentioned.

4 It may be noted that these vehicles were all drawn by bullocks.

5 A number of instruments of war are mentioned here as being sold in open bazaars. The instruments for ivory cuttings flower-work, the decorative arts, etc., show the high state of culture reached in the early centuries of the Christian era.

(pukai),¹ pastes, and flower-work, which were so rich and innumerable that they even evoked the envy of monarchs.

Kōvalan next passed through the wealthy street unpenetrated by enemies, full of groups of dealers in superior diamonds² which were free from such defects as crows' feet, spots, holes and lines, which had no natural deficiencies observable by experts of trained acuteness, and which reflected the colours of the four castes.³ Emeralds of green brilliance free from black spots and defects of line and curve; the māṇikkam variety known as patumam, nīlam, bindu, and spaṭikam, all of which were free from recognized defects; the pusparāga set with gold resembling a cat's eye; the beautiful sardonyx (gōmēdaga) with the faultless brilliance of the sun; the blue gem with crystalized darkness; the double-coloured vaidūrya;⁴ the good gems of five different kinds born from a common source⁵ and glimmering like the setting sun, as well as heaps of white pearls (candrāguru), pink-lustred pearls (angāraka)⁶

1 Pukai stands for all the varieties of burning incense used at that ancient time.

2 Experts in the art of cutting gems. The nine kinds of precious stones are mentioned. Aṭṭyārkunallār furnishes interesting details as regards their superiority and fineness as well as of the defects of each one of them. The commentator's study is scientific and deserves close scrutiny.

3 The colours of four castes, white, red, green and black are distinguished in the diamonds.

4 The interpretation of Arumpatavurai is followed in ll. 189-90. What this Āśiriyār, interprets as gōmēdaga, Aṭṭyārkunallār interprets as Vaidūrya, and vice versa.

5 The common source of some of the gems was crystal quartz.

6 It is interesting to note that some of the pearls are named after the planets sōma, guru, and angāraka.

and pearls of the finest quality (āṇimuttu),¹ all of which sparkled without any blemish caused by wind or sand, stone or water. There were also well-formed corals completely free from flaws in their inner cavities, without stones in their interspaces, and untwisted.²

The excellent streets of the goldsmiths were next seen with flags³ enabling the gold-dealers to avoid confusion as to the kind of gold available in each shop variously called jātarūpa, kiṭicciṭai (parrot's wings), āṭakam and jāmbūnadam.

He then went through the street of cloth merchants, where several kinds of bundles were piled up, each of a hundred cloths woven of cotton thread, hair, or silk thread;⁴ the street of corn-chandlers where merchants were seen going about here and there with balances, measuring-vessels known as parai, and grain-measures (ambaṇam),⁵ filled with sacks⁶ of grain and black pepper

1 Aṭiyārkunallār interprets ll. 195-6 as follows: 'Pearls of the round sort, their natural colour white (veḷḷi) and pink (angāraka).

2 The defects and merits of corals are furnished here. One defect is that during the course of its growth, stones entered into the interspaces. Such corals were considered inferior.

3 Four kinds of gold were offered for sale and in front of each shop hung a flag—the signpost indicative of the kind of gold available within.

4 Clothes were made from cotton, rat's hair, silk thread, see Cīvakaśintāmaṇi, st. 2686.

5 For ambaṇavaḷavai, see Paṭṭiru., p. 66, 2nd. ed. It was a grainmeasure equal to the modern marakkāl. Parai was another measuring-vessel in use.

6 The word grain, according to the commentator, stands for sixteen kinds of grains grouped in bags in the streets. One of them was pepper.

irrespective of the seasons; the four different streets occupied by the men of the four castes;¹ the intersection of three streets;² the termini of four streets;³ the streets of petty shops; maṇrams; lanes and broad streets; and finally went beyond the ramparts (of the city) through the shade of an arbour⁴ of clustering green leaves, impervious to the fierce rays of the sun blazing in the sky. Seeing thus the great city of the protecting (Pāṇṭyan) king, Kōvalan was highly pleased.

1 There were caste streets as distinguished from other streets of the city, where lived artisans and other classes pursuing different arts and crafts.

2 The term used generally is isṭicandi, sometimes, muccanti.

3 The catukkam was also known as nārcanti.

4 According to the commentator, the shade of the numerous flags and festoons offered shelter to the passer-by. But this does not seem quite appropriate, since Kōvalan went outside the rampart from the interior of the city.

CANTO XV

ATAIKKALAK KATAI

OR

THE HAVEN

HAVING seen the ancient and great city of Madura distinguished for the highly righteous sceptre, the coolness of the (royal) umbrella, and the prowess of the spear of the Kauriyar¹ who dutifully turned the wheel of law under the merciful guidance of a bountiful providence,² and never deserted by its law-abiding citizens,³ Kōvalan went outside

1 Among the titles given to the Pāṇṭya, one is Kauriyar. The two terms Pāṇṭyan and Kauriyar which occur in Caṅkam literature strongly suggest that they are derived from Pāṇṭu and Kuru. We know of the Pāṇṭavas and Kauravas as foster-brothers fighting the great war recounted in the Mahābhārata, at ancient Kurukṣetra. Both belonged to one and the same stock. Apparently a branch of this stock was established in the extreme south of India and became prominent among South Indian dynasties. But there is evidence suggesting an indigenous origin to this dynasty as the present writer has ventured to conjecture in a footnote in his Studies in Tamil Literature and History, p. 179. The subject requires further examination and scrutiny.

2 It means there was no hunger, disease, theft or trouble from neighbours (see canto v, st. 72).

3 The idea is that the king was such a just monarch that the people of the city never thought of leaving it for a foreign land. It may be noted in passing that it was a custom in ancient India for the people to forsake their kings if they conducted themselves unrighteously, by deserting their capital for that of other and more just kings. See the Kauṭaliya Arthaśāstra, Bk. XIII, § 1. This seems to have been an effective weapon on the part of the the gates of the fortress, into the grove wherein dwelt monks engaged in imparting dharma.

And while he was narrating to the sage Kavunti the undiminishing prosperity of Madura and the prowess of the Pāṇṭyan king, Māṭalan of Talaiccenkānam,¹ the first amongst Brahmanas, well versed in the four Vēdas, appeared at their residence in the grove surrounded by a shallow moat. He had come there to obtain relief from the fatigue of his journey while returning to his own family, after circumambulating the hill² sacred to the great sage, and bathing in the bathing ghat of the Kumari.

To him Kōvalan prostrated himself, while the Brahmana skilled in speech,³ on being addressed, replied as follows :

‘When Mātavi, tender as the young mango-leaf, after winning the king’s gift⁴ for dancing, gave birth to a tender subjects to make the king conduct himself justly and truly towards them.

1 Talaiccenkānam is Talaiccenkāṭu, a village of the ancient Cōla kingdom, perhaps identical with the village now bearing that name about six miles south-west of Kāvērippattinam. It is a sacred place mentioned in the Tēvāram.

2 Potiyil, sacred to the sage Agastya. For the Agastya tradition in the South and Greater India, the reader’s attention is Dikshitar’s Some Aspects of the Vāyu Purāṇa (Madras University, 1933), in the section entitled ‘Agastya and Greater India.’ See also K. A. Nilakanta Sastri’s ‘Agastya’, in Tijdschrift Van Ind., Vol LXXVI, No. 4.

3 This special attribute given by the poet Māṭalan shows that the latter was famous for his oratorical powers.

4 The Cōla king under reference who had given Mātavi a special gift for dancing is identified by the commentator Aṭiyārkkūbabe and passed through the period of pollution,¹ you responded to the sweet words appropriate to the occasion of the older dancers who desired that the daughter should be given a fitting name, by saying. "An ancestor of mine² was once shipwrecked in the dead of night in the great sea of mighty waves; but because he had performed several good deeds, he kept himself afloat by swimming for some days.³ Then appeared before him the deity of the sea⁴ saying, 'I live here under orders from Indra. I have come before you. Be not afraid; my name is Maṇimēkalai.⁵ The fruits of your great charity are not lost. Surmount the great ocean of your suffering'; and thus she saved him from his distress by bringing him back to the shore. As she is my family deity, let her name be given nallār as Karikāla. But the latest researches point to a somewhat different conclusion. (See P. T. S. Iyengar's History of the Tamils, pp. 372 ff; K. A. Nilakanta Sastri's Studies in Cōla History and Administration, pp. 19 ff.; M. Raghava Aiyangar's Cēran Cenguṭṭuvan, 3rd ed., pp. 101 ff.; and K. N. Sivaraja Pillai's The Chronology of the Early Tamils, pp. 88 ff.)

1 Evidently the observance of rules regarding pollution during the period of confinement was an ancient Tamil practice.

2 Cf. Maṇi., canto vii, ll. 33-8; canto xxix, l. 19. See Dikshitar's paper 'Buddhism in Tamil Literature' in Buddhist Studies (Calcutta), edited By B. C. Law, p. 679, for a fuller version of the story.

3 'Some day's may be taken to be 'seven days' in the light of the text in the Maṇimēkalai, canto xxix, l. 16.

4 This story has a parallel in the Buddhist Jātaka stories. See E. B. Cowell, Jātakas, Vol. IV, pp. 9-13; Vol. VI, Nos. 442 and 539, p. 22.

5 Maṇimēkalai, the guardian deity of the sea, was the family deity of Kōvalan.

to this baby.' Then a thousand courtesans with jewelled girdles blessed the child with the name Maṇimēkalai.¹

'On that day when you sat with that happy lady Mātavi, and showered gifts of gold with your beautiful hands, a Brahmana, with bent body, having attained the very limits of knowledge and good conduct,² came feebly along with the aid of a stick in order to receive gifts. Seeing him in the clutches of a fast and furious elephant which had thrown its mahout and was rushing in all directions to the loud noise of the drum,³ O merciful hero, you stepped forth instantly with a cry, and after rescuing that man of high birth, you released yourself from its curved hollow trunk and remaining between the white tusks, stood on its nape like a Vidyādhara on a dark hill, and curbed the still furious beast.

'On another occasion, a Brahmana left for the north abandoning his wife who had caused the death of a young mungoose.⁴ When she followed him, the Brahmana said: "It is not proper for me to eat food served by your hands.

1 The ceremony of naming a child, still current in India as nāmakaraṇam, was one of the many samskāras specially incumbent on the twice-born classes. We know from literature that Kōvalaṇ was a Vaiśya and hence belonged to the class of the twice-born.

2 The śiṣṭa according to Sanskrit didactic literature.

3 It seems to have been a peculiar ancient custom in Tamil India that when an elephant became must and went rampaging through the streets, a drum was sounded so as to be heard throughout the city warning citizens of the mad elephant's movements. This kept people within doors lest they should fall victims to the beast.

4 For this folk-tale see the Pañcatantra. See also Dikshitar's paper on 'Folklore and the Migration of Legends' in the Annals of the Bhandarkar Research Institute, 1934, pp. 212-19.

You give this note containing a Sanskrit verse¹ to people leading a virtuous life." With this the Brahmana lady went through the bazaars where the tall mansions of the wealthy merchants were, and showed the note from house to house proclaiming, "O, will no one relieve me of my sins and enjoy the fruits of so doing?" At once you called to her and asked, "What is your trouble and what is this (note)?" The lady narrated to you the great distress she was in, and said, "Take this leaf on which has been written the verse, and by giving me money absolve me from my great sin." You replied to her, "Do not fret, do not be afraid. I shall relieve you of your difficulty"; and in order that her sinful deed might be atoned for, you made gifts in accordance with the instituted rules,² and relieved that lady of her worry. O wealthy

1 The śloka quoted by Aṭiyārkunallār is from the Pañcatantra, Bk. V. Tale 1, and is as follows:

Aparikṣya na kartavyam kartavyam suparikṣitam |
Paścāt bhavati santāpō brāhmaṇi nakulam yathā ||

The context shows that the story occurred in Pukār during the lifetime of Kōvalan. But as it finds mention in an earlier text like Tantrākhyāyika, an earlier recension of the Pañcatantra, this raises a great chronological difficulty. One way out of this tangle is to consider it a later interpolation. Whether or not the story be true, it bears testimony to the fact that Kōvalan possessed a sound knowledge of Sanskrit. Apparently the note was a cadjan leaf on which had been written the verse by the Brahmana.

2 Belief in expiatory rites shows that the influence of the Dharmasūtras and Dharmaśāstras had gained ground in the Tamil land. This indicates the charitable nature of Kōvalan' and also that Kōvalan's wealth was limitless. In this connexion the term uruporul is interesting. According to the Kuralveṇpā 756, it is the unclaimed property that went to fill the coffers of the king. But Kōvalan could not have unclaimed property. Hence it is man of imperishable riches! Then you made her husband, who had left for the forest, (come back and) live with her in the right path (of household life) by giving them copious wealth out of your limitless riches.

‘On still another occasion, a chaste lady was falsely accused. A man who went to her husband and gave false evidence was seized by the cruel noose of a Būtam, who devoured such offenders.¹ Seeing the deep sorrow of the mother of that erring man, you at once entered the knots of that noose and said to the gracious and good Būtam, “Take away my life and yield him his”. Without agreeing, it said, “There is no prescription to accept a good life in the place of a bad life, lest I should lose thereby the enjoyment of the next world. Please give up the idea”. When the Būtam had devoured him in your presence, O best among householders, you accompanied that lady, grief-stricken at heart, and like a close relative, prevented for several years the exhaustion of hunger which would have overtaken his family² and all its cognate branches.

correct to accept Tolkāppiyāṇār’s interpretation of ‘much’ or ‘copious’.

1 This points to the prevalent practice of punishing false witnesses with death. Cf. Kuruntokai, st. 184. It is interesting to note that the Kauṭaliya Arthaśāstra rules to that effect. But the method of meting out this punishment is rather strange. There was the Būtam whose function it was to punish with death all who committed heinous offences. It would not accept a good life for a bad one. In fact the Būtam had no power to do so. See also canto v, ll. 128 and 134.

2 Dāyādins of Sanskrit literature. This also demonstrates the existence of the joint-family system in the Tamil land, and how there was a vast family of dependents on a single earning member, and how after his death, wealthy neighbours volunteered to give succour.

‘I know all the good things you have done in this birth,¹ but owing to your deeds in the past birth, O Gōpāla² of ripe knowledge, you have fallen into indescribable suffering along with your gem-like young wife who is like Lakṣhmī herself.’

To this Kōvalaṇ replied, ‘Half awake in the middle of the dark night I dreamt thus :³ “Through a low person in this city, well defended by the righteous monarch, this girl with the five plaits of fragrant hair suffered great agony; stripped of my robes by some stranger I mounted a horned buffalo. Later in the company of this handsome lady of the charmingly curled hair, I attained the great status⁴ of those who have renounced attachment. I also saw Mātavi yielding her daughter Maṇimēkalai to a Buddhist saint of great glory,⁵ thereby making the god of love fling his flower dart on the barren ground and sob helpless.”’

‘I anticipate some imminent trouble.’

1 Cf. Kuraḷvenpā, 169, and the commentary of Parimēla-lakar.

2 Gōpāla seems to be the Sanskrit variant to the Tamil name Kōvalaṇ.

3 Dr. Swaminatha Aiyar refers to the treatise entitled Kaṇānūl, discovered and published for the first time in Sentamil, Vol. I, Pt. III, and subsequently published as a booklet by Vidvan R. Raghava Aiyangar. A parallel may be drawn from the Rāmāyaṇa, ‘Ayōdhya’, ch. 59, where Bharata dreams a fearful dream during the night of Daśaratha’s death, the latter riding in a southerly direction, in a chariot yoked with asses. Cf. Kaṇānūl, st. 2, 4, 10 and 15; Puṇam., st. 41; Kuraḷvenpā, 247.

4 He obtained salvation which was generally secured only by men of detachment from mundane things. This means that the bondage of birth and death ceased to exist for him.

5 See Maṇi., canto ii, ll. 73-4, etc.

Then the Vēdic Brahmana and the saint Kavunti together observed: 'As this place outside the city¹ is not fit to be lived in except by righteous monks, leave here for the interior of the vast city, to the residences of Vaiśyas² who will receive you because of your past reputation. Leave this place before sunset and enter the city of Madura with its tall mansions.'

Just then, Mātari, an old woman of the cowherd caste, who was returning after making the usual offering of milk to the flower-eyed yakkiṇi.³ enshrined outside the city gates in the quarters of monks practising dharma, saw and prostrated herself before the saint Kavunti who then thought within herself: 'The life of cowherds who protect cows and offer what they yield is not harmful.'⁴ This aged lady is without fault and is, besides, virtuous

1 Puracclrai are the quarters outside the gates of the city, being the residences of those who dedicate themselves to a life of holiness and detachment and consequently householders are unfit to live in them.

2 Vaiśyas are said to be next in rank to the Kṣatriyas.

3 Yakṣī-dēvatā. Dr Swaminatha Aiyar in a note informs us that in the Jalna books, every one of the twenty-four Tirthankaras was served by a Yakka and Yakkiṇi. This name is current as Isakki in places round about Cape Comorin. Aṭiyārkunallār interprets it as āriyānkaṇai, and on the authority of the Tiruviḷaiyāṭal Purāṇam, st. 63, l 17, āriyānkaṇai, is one who takes to asceticism during the life time of her husband. Her shrine was situated outside the city proper (puracclrai). But we know from history and legends as testified to by the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahāvamśa that the Yakṣas were one of the early ruling tribes in ancient South India and Ceylon, and died out some time before the commencement of the Christian era.

4 This testifies to the simple and god-fearing life led by members of the community of cowherds.

and merciful. It is not therefore wrong to lodge Kaṇṇaki with Mātari.'

She then addressed Mātari thus: 'Listen! If merchants of this city hear the name of this lady's father-in-law,¹ they will welcome him (her husband) as a guest, as if they had received a rare fortune, and take him and this lady of the beaming-eyes to their well-guarded home² along with them. Till she goes to the houses of those very rich people, accept her, O cowherdess, as a refugee. Give this auspicious girl an excellent bath, decorate her long red eyes with black collyrium, adorn her soft tresses with choice flowers, deck her in pure clothes and as becomes worthy people, remain as her maid, protectress and mother. Accept her. Mother Earth had no compassion³ on the tender tread of this creeper-like girl, who came with me. Oblivious of her own suffering this celebrated lady, although fainting from thirst in the scorching sun, felt more keenly the suffering of her husband. We (Kavunti) have not seen any shining deity other than this goddess who has taken the vow of chastity necessary to devoted housewives. Do you not know the truth of the good saying that in a land where chaste women live, rains will not fail,⁴ prosperity will not decrease, and the great monarch's victory will not diminish?

1 This shows that Mācāttuvān's name was well known to the merchants of Madura. It would appear that he was a princely merchant.

2 This points to the fact that the houses of wealthy merchants were under watch and ward, and this is not surprising considering the stories of expert thieves given in the classic itself.

3 In simple language it means that she was footsore. And yet in spite of this she felt for her husband's distress and not her own.

4 Cf. Kuralvenpā, 55.

‘Listen again. Though what is given for safe-keeping by men of penance be small,¹ it is bound to yield many fruitful results. Before the Cāraṇar preaching dharma from the shining slab of stone, erected by Śāvakas,² beneath the unchanging shade of the flowery asōka, in the town adjoining the Kāvēri³ region, stood a Dēva of great power, with beauteous form, resplendent like Indra’s bow, adorned with garlands of flowers and gems, wearing gold ornaments, fit to be worshipped by the many invisible gods, but with one of his hands resembling that of a monkey with black fingers.

‘All the Śāvakas worshipped the Cāraṇar and wanted to know the reason for the appearance of this Dēva, when the god spoke as follows :

“Once there was a merchant called Eṭṭi-Śāyalaṇ.⁴ In his house many would gather who observed fasting. One day the chief lady of the house reverentially received the foremost among the monks. At the same time a small monkey from the village silently entered the house and worshipped the feet of the great divine. Impelled by hunger, it ate the leavings of the food and water consumed by the ascetic, and gazed on him. The wise person of steadfast mind became glad at heart and addressed the

1 For a definition of penance, see Civakacintāmaṇi, st 1547.

2 The Śāvakas were Jaina householders who heard with reverence occasional preachings of dharma from the Cāraṇar, a class of divinities accepted by Hindu tradition.

3 Kāvīrīppūmpākkattuppattīṇam: Cf. Maṇi, canto xxv. l. 16.

4 A title given to merchant-princes by the king. Cf. Maṇi, canto iv, l. 58; Perumkatai, Bk. I, ch. 40, l. 116.

lady of the house, saying, 'Regard this monkey as one of your own sons.'

"The lady agreed to the wise words of the saint. When the loving monkey died, the lady gave away the property set apart¹ for it, to the assembled Cāraṇar and prayed that it might be absolved from all its sins.² Hence it was born as the only son of Uttaragautta³ at Vāraṇāsi in the middle country.⁴ This son who was celebrated for his beauty, wealth and great wisdom, and noted for his great gifts died in his thirty-second year. Later he attained the form of a Dēvakumāra and has come here with the monkey's hand on one of his arms, as if to announce to all the Śāvakas, "Please note that all my wealth and enjoyments were the outcome of the gifts of her who protected me with grace. Though in my previous birth a monkey, this change of form is due to the gifts of Śāyalaṇ's wife."

'The pious men of that city who heard these good and wise words of the Cāraṇar and regarded them as God's very 1 In accordance with the advice given by the monk to regard it as one of her sons, the lady treated it as such, set apart a portion of the family property to the monkey, and on its death, distributed that wealth in charity.

2 The idea is that it may not be born hereafter as an animal.

3 Uttaragautta was the ruling king of Benares.

4 Benares in the Madhyadēśa. The geographical limits of ancient Madhyadēśa have hardly been settled satisfactorily. Madhyadēśa is frequently mentioned in Vedic and epic literature as well as in Buddhist literature. Manu makes Prayāg the eastern boundary of the region and by this he seems to exclude the region of Kāśī from the Madhyadēśa. But Kāśī is a part of it according to the authority of the Kāvyaṁimāmsā. This agrees also with the statement in the Cīlappatikāram.

words, men of penance in that region, the Śāvakas leading the life of virtuous householders, the Eṭṭi and his wife who gave away gifts (dāna)—all of them went to the last world of unending bliss.

‘Now that you have heard this account, accompany this lady (Kaṇṇaki) with the flower-decked hair, without wasting any more time.’

When Kavunti said this, Mātari became glad at heart. She praised the saint and took leave of her at the time when the sun was setting. Beside wise Kaṇṇaki, with beautiful, tender breasts, with shoulders resembling the bent-bamboo, and with sprouting white teeth she passed along, hearing cows bellow aloud in search of their calves. They soon found themselves in the midst of cowherds bearing on their shoulders, lambs, axes and poles with uri,¹ and cowherdresses with shining bracelets.

The cowherdess Mātari entered her house with her refugee, after passing through the gateway—with the daily flag flying thereon²—of the fortress walls encircled by a forest of defence and a moat, surmounted by a mechanical bow with self-projecting (arrows),³ a clutching machine⁴ with its black claws, slings, shooting stones, boiling oils, cauldrons for smelting copper, furnaces for smelting iron,

1 A brief description of cowherds and their womenfolk returning home after nightfall.

2 The flag celebrating daily victory. The interpretation is appropriate in the light of the Maturaikkāñci. l. 368.

3 Lines 207-16 have been quoted by the celebrated commentator Parimēlaḷakar in commenting on the Kuraḷvenpā 743. Here is a detailed description of defences in the fortification.

4 The machine would clutch, like a monkey, those who touched it.

baskets of stones (for throwing), hooks,¹ chains,² traps shaped like āṇṭalai birds,³ iron arms,⁴ sharp poles,⁵ bundles of arrows and of nails, fearful beams, needles to be thrust into the fingers (of enemies), the kingfisher machine which would pluck out the eyes (of the enemy), pig-shaped implements,⁶ bamboo-like machines,⁷ heavy weighted bolts,⁸ wooden bars thrust across the entrance, clubs, missiles, lances, and many more such things.⁹

1 Hooks were to pull up people scaling fortress walls.

2 Chains were used for strangling.

3 Traps which would fly like the bird āṇṭalai and peck forcibly at the crown of the head. This bird is said to possess a manlike head. (See Kalinga., 'Kōil', l. 16.)

4 Iron rods for throwing enemies into the moat if they attempted to cross it.

5 These were poles with pointed heads upon which the enemy was transfixed and pulled downwards so as to rend his body into two halves.

6 These were of iron whose spikes would tear out the bowels of an enemy.

7 These were fastened with iron rods to beat enemies with.

8 The mechanism by which these bolts would drop suddenly on the heads of persons who attempted to open the doorways.

9 This suggests that the abovementioned devices did not exhaust the defences of the fort.

CANTO XVI

KOLAIKKALAK KATAI

OR

THE PLACE OF EXECUTION

THE cowherdess (Mātari) who delightedly took the precious damsel (Kaṇṇaki) under her protection, left her to the other cowherdresses with excellent bangles, in a secure cottage,¹ beautified with red mud, which had a cool courtyard in front, separated from the hedge-encircled residential quarters² of the cowherds who sold buttermilk.

After giving her a refreshing bath, Mātari addressed her in words of praise thus: 'O you, who have come here with beauty unadorned, as if to destroy the made-up beauty³ of Madura ladies decorated with costly and glittering jewels of gold, take my daughter Aiyai, as your personal attendant. I shall keep watch over you, O girl with the fragrant locks of hair, as keenly as I would over gold.⁴ O lady, live here with me.' She continued: 'The 1 Apparently it was the guest-house of the cowherd community. The courtyard in front perhaps resembled those invariably found in front of the houses recently excavated in the Indus valley.

2 A description of the residential quarters of the cowherds, their architecture and outward appearance. The simple life of these people is portrayed. Cf. Perumpāṇā, l. 163; Kalittokai, st. 104; Akam., st. 394.

3 A contrast between the natural beauty of Kaṇṇaki and the made-up beauty of Madura women.

4 The importance and value of gold are emphasized elsewhere also (see Ācāra, st. 99).

lady of great penance (Kavuntī) has cured¹ you of the fatigue of your journey and brought you to a faultless place; have you any more anxiety for your husband?'²

Turning to her maidens she said: 'Since this lord (Kōvalan) observes the vows of the Śavakas,³ get ready without delay the good vessels needed by Kaṇṇaki to cook the daily meal with the aid of her husband's sister.'⁴ At this the cowherdresses offered unused cooking-vessels as befitting wealthy people and some almost ripe, round jack-fruits that never flower,⁵ white-striped cucumbers, green pomegranates, mangoes, sweet plantains, rice of the first quality, and milk from their own cows,⁶ saying: 'Lady of the round bracelets, please receive these.'

When Kaṇṇaki had cut the different green vegetables with a curved knife, her tender fingers became reddened, her face perspired, her superb eyes became bloodshot; and she turned aside from the smoking oven. Then with the aid of the fire of straw lit by Aiyai, Kaṇṇaki cooked to the best of her ability for her husband. When that lord had seated himself on a small mat dexterously made from the white leaves of the palmyra tree by a trained

1 Spiritual cure is implied.

2 The word for husband in the text is makan, a rare use of the term in this sense. See Maṇi., canto xxi, l. 29.

3 Aṭiyārkunallār makes Kōvalan a Jain and interprets the passage in the light of the Jaina custom of not eating after night-fall. It may be a reference to the daily meal.

4 The reference is to Aiyai whom Kaṇṇaki treats as though she were Kōvalan's sister.

5 Kōlippākai is still eaten in Madura.

6 This list of the food of the Āyar community indicates their standard of living. The inference is that they were vegetarians.

maid,¹ with her flower-like hands she sprinkled water from an earthen-pot over the feet of her lord.²

Then as if to remove the unconsciousness of Mother Earth, she sprinkled water on the ground and making it smooth with her palms, spread a tender plantain leaf and said: 'Here is food, O Lord! Please eat.' When everything prescribed for those born in the Vaiśya caste had been performed as well as possible,³ Aiyai and her mother looked at them with pleased eyes and said: 'Is this lord who eats good food Kṛṣṇa⁴ with the colour of the newly-opened kāya flower, nursed by Aśōtai⁵ in the village of cowherds? Is this lady with many shoulder-bracelets the 1 These are some of the Vaiśya practices and conventions before taking food. Cf. Tolk., 'Marap.', sūtra 85. The earth is cleaned by sprinkling it with water so that the surface may be even and will not injure the leaf on which the meal is served. The plantain-leaf, then, as today, served this purpose. It may be noted that the āsana or seat was made not of wood but of grass.

2 It was then a practice, as is still observed among certain communities, to wash the feet before going to meals. Here it is not clear whether Kaṇṇaki removed the water from Kōvalan's feet consequent on his washing, or whether she poured water on his feet and then sprinkled it on her face as an act of purification. Relics of these practices still linger in this country.

3 'As well as possible' is used by the poet advisedly. It implies that Kōvalan could not attend to all his daily religious duties as thoroughly and punctually in a foreign place as he could in his own home.

4 Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki are compared to Kṛṣṇa and Nappinnai, the cowherdess whom Kṛṣṇa took in wedlock. Here is a hard fact proving the antiquity of the Kṛṣṇa cult, well known in the early centuries of the Christian era.

5 Yaśoda (Tamil, Aśōdai) is the wife of Nanda and foster-mother of Kṛṣṇa, the family god of cowherds. (See Bhāga. Pur., Bk. X, ch. 9, st., 14-20).

brightest lamp (Pinnai) of our community, who gave succour to the Lord of the blue gem, on the banks of the river Yamunā?¹ Our eyes are not (keen) enough to see this splendid sight.'

To great Kōvalan who was sitting fully satisfied after his meal, were offered tender leaves and nuts² by (Kaṇṇaki) of the black tresses. He said to her: 'Come' and clasping her, continued: 'Doubting whether these tender feet of thine would have strength enough to walk over the tracts covered with gravel and stone, and taking pity on us for having crossed these painful deserts, how miserable will our aged parents³ feel? Is this (our present condition) illusion? Is it due to cruel fate?⁴ My mind is so confused that I know nothing. O is there hope for one who has wasted his days in the company of useless men and debauchees, among groups of scandal-mongers indulging in boisterous laughter, ever hankering after sinful deeds, neglecting the good words spoken by wise men? I have not been dutiful to my aged parents. I

1 The Yamunā is the river where Kṛiṣṇa sported with the cowherdresses. This is a reference to the aquatics (jalakṛīḍa) indulged in by Kṛiṣṇa in the course of his rāsakṛīḍa (ibid., ch. 30-34): see also Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bk. V, ch. 13.

2 Note the reference to the use of betels and nuts after food. The reader may profitably compare this with ll. 240-3 of canto xxviii of the Maṇimēkalai, where Maṇimēkalai entertains Aravaṇaṭikaḷ to dinner. This proves that even Bhikṣus took betels, a custom forbidden by Hindu law; also that camphor took the place of chuṇām. Cf. Jātakas, Vol. I, pp. 132 and 152. See also Tolk., 'Eṭai', sūtra 36, commentary by Iḷampūraṇar.

3 The expression yemmutukuravar in this line means 'our parents' and consequently the reference is to the parents of both Kaṇṇaki and Kōvalan.

4 Cf. Kuṛaḷveṇpā 1311.

have also disgraced thee who art young in years, but old in wisdom. I never thought that I was doing wrong. Even though I asked thee not to leave our great city for this place,¹ thou camest with me. What a thing thou didst !

Kaṇṇaki rejoined : ‘Though I could not give charity to observers of dharma,² or honour Brahmanas, receive saints and ascetics, or entertain guests as befits our great family, I hid from your revered mother and your highly reputed and honourable father, much esteemed by the king, my sorrow at not having you before me; but they knew it and were full of affection for me and spoke loving words. In spite of my pretended smile, my emaciated body made them know my inner anxiety at which they were highly grieved. Though you deviated from the right path, because I kept to the path of rectitude, I volunteered to come along with you.’

Kōvalaṇ said : ‘O thou who hast given up thy parents and relations, menial servants, nurse-maids³ and female-attendants, and taken as thy great aids modesty, credulity, good conduct, and chastity,⁴ hast rid me of my troubles by accompanying me.

1 The reference is to Pukār and Madura.

2 The duties of a true householder are given. Cf. Kuraḷ, ch. 8. Parimēlaḷakar quotes ll. 71-3 in his commentary. It may be noted in passing that these duties correspond to the injunctions of Hindu law. Chaste women could not give charity in the absence of their husbands.

3 Aṭiyōr-pāṅku. Five are distinguished : one who plays with a child, one who feeds it, one who lulls it to sleep, one who teaches it to speak, and its foster-mother. See Cīvakaśintāmaṇi, st. 363 and commentary.

4 These four attributes took the place of parents, maldservants, companions and associates. The Pingalandai Nlghaṇṭu ‘O purest gold, creeper, girl with fragrant curls of hair !

‘O embodiment of modesty, light of the vast world !

‘O tender offshoot of chastity, storehouse of virtues !

‘I shall go with one of the anklets that adorn thy beautiful feet and return after exchanging it for money. Till then do not lose heart.’

Closely embracing his lady-love of the long black eyes, feeling much for her being lonely and without relations, and restraining the tears rising in his eyes because of his mental anxiety, he left the home of the cowherds and wearily walked along the street, without knowing —because his caste men were not aware of it—that the humped bull¹ coming in front of him indicated a bad omen, passed beyond the tāterumanṇam; then passing through the streets of courtesans, he reached the bazaar. There he saw a goldsmith who with a coat on, was walking at some distance,² pincers in hand, followed by a hundred goldsmiths famous for their delicate workmanship and exquisite handiwork in jewellery;³ and thinking within speaks of nārkunam as four masculine qualities and four feminine qualities.

1 Superstition of the Āyar in observing bad and good omens. What was a superstition for one community was not for another. Vaiśyas did not consider a humped bull coming in front a bad omen, but cowherds did.

2 Arumpatavuraiācriyar remarks, that being a member of a low caste, he kept himself at a respectable distance from the members of higher castes. But the expression may be interpreted as referring to the particular gait of the goldsmith which distinguished him from others of his class.

3 Kaṇṇūlvinaṇṇar and nuṇvinaikkollar are interpreted by Aṭṭiyārkunallar as skilled in ‘melting gold’ and ‘making beautiful jewels’.

himself that this must be the state goldsmith¹ of the much-celebrated Pāṇṭyan, Kōvalan asked him, 'Can you please estimate the price of an ornament for an ankle, suitable for the queen of the protecting king?'

The goldsmith who resembled Yama's messenger replied (as if) reverentially, 'Though I am ignorant about that,² I can make crowns and other ornaments required by kings.' Thereupon Kōvalan opened the bundle which contained the invaluable anklet. The goldsmith, a habitual liar, minutely examined the workmanship of the artistic anklet, embossed with shining gold and containing inside the best rubies and diamonds carved with serried depressions, and said, 'This anklet can be demanded by none other than the great queen (Kōpperuntēvi). I shall go now and inform the victorious king about this. Till I return, please stay here near my little hut.'

Then Kōvalan went to the *tēvakōṭṭam*³ near that lowly man's house, and when he had entered a small chamber, the hard-hearted thief (goldsmith) said to himself, 'Before the fact of my having stolen the anklet is publicly known,⁴ I will accuse this stranger from another land of the theft to the king', and walked on (to the palace).

1 The office of state goldsmith was an institution in ancient India. See Kaut. Artha., Bk. II, § 13.

2 Note the dishonesty of the goldsmith, and the price he pays for it in the end.

3 Tēvakōṭṭam may refer to a small shrine erected in front of the goldsmith's shop.

4 From this it would appear that the goldsmith had very recently robbed the queen of her anklet, and this fact was not yet known to the public.

There the great queen imagining that the king's heart had been won by the graceful appearance of the Madura dancing-girls who sang different songs, and displayed the wealth of their instrumental music in their dances, hid her jealousy in a love-quarrel; and feigning a headache left him. When his minister and counsellors¹ went away, the king repaired to the great queen's chamber attended by female servants with long glowing eyes.

The goldsmith who saw the king at the last entrance of the guarded gateway prostrated himself before him, and praising him in several ways, said: 'The thief who used neither crow-bar nor auger,² but relied on the strength of sleep-giving incantations to put to sleep the watchmen at the gate before stealing the palace anklet,³ is now staying in my lowly little hut hiding himself from the watchmen of this bustling city.'

Because that was the moment of the ripening of past karmā, the wearer of the garland of margosa⁴ flowers (the king) without any inquiry, sent for the city watchmen and ordered: 'Now, if you find the foot-ornament of my consort resembling the flower-garland in the possession of an expert thief, kill him,⁵ and bring the anklet here.'

At this command of the king, the villainous goldsmith, glad at heart, said to himself, 'I have achieved what I

1 The term used in the text is mantiraśśuram.

2 Crowbars and boring sticks were some of the instruments of robbers. Note also the belief in incantations.

3 Kōil is a technical term for the palace.

4 The Pāṇṭyan king wore a margosa garland.

5 This is a case of punishment without judicial trial, contrary to the accepted practice. This was resorted to by the king in order to reconcile his queen.

wished,' and approaching Kōvalan, whose cruel fate had enmeshed him in its close net, said (pointing to the men), 'These have come here to see the anklet at the bidding of the king, possessor of the victorious army.' This false goldsmith convincingly explained to them all the things relating to the workmanship of the anklet. But the valiant (executioners) observed: 'The appearance and features of this man do not show him to be deserving of execution.'¹

The wily goldsmith smiled scornfully at them, and set forth his reasons:² 'Mantra, daiva, drugs, omen, trickery, place, time and instrument are the eight aids employed by low persons pursuing the ignoble profession of thieves. If you are deceived by this man's drugs, you will expose yourselves to the great wrath of our renowned king. If thieves utter a mantra and meditate upon it, they can become invisible like the sons of gods.'³

'If they perform the feat of making gods appear before them, they can show in their hands the stolen objects and yet walk safely away. By stupefying us with their drugs they can make us sit still in the same place. Unless a good omen presents itself they do not steal, however valuable a thing, even if it easily falls into their hands. If

1 The first impression of the executioners was that Kōvalan was innocent.

2 The eight aids employed by a thief. Dr Swaminatha Aiyar shows in a footnote that kaḷavunūl (the science of theft) was the śtēyakaśāstra attributed to Karṇisuta, the teacher of Kaca.

3 The term in the text Indirakumarar, literally means sons of Indra. Aṭṭyārkunallār interprets Indirar as dēvar. Therefore the expression may mean sons of gods. The commentator points to another interpretation: Antarakumarar.

they resort to magic,¹ they can deprive even Indra of the garland on his breast.

‘If they decide upon the place whence they will to steal a particular object, who could discover them at that place? If they decide upon the time and get possession of the object, even the gods could not deprive them of it. If they steal valuables by employing their tools, who, in this wide world, could find them out? To them, there is neither day nor night. If you would listen to the science of theft,² there is no end to it.

‘Once, a certain thief stayed at the palace gate like an ambassador (all the day) and when it grew dark, disguised as a woman, he entered without any hesitation, in the shadow cast by the lamp, and in an instant removed the garland of diamonds sparkling like the sun’s rays³ from the Crown Prince.⁴ The awakened (prince) found it missing from his shoulders and drew his sword from its sheath, which the thief clasped and warded off all the blows with it. Tired of this, the prince attempted a hand-to-hand fight, but the thief, expert in his science, escaped after

1 Tantara-karaṇam, in the text refers to one of the eight aids mentioned in the work. According to the Arumpatavurai, it is a reference to Karavaṭaśāstram itself.

2 The reference here is certainly to Karavaṭanūl (Karaviṭam) or Karvaṭa by Mūladēva. Can it be a reference to the Khara-paṭṭa of Kaṇṭalya? See T. Ganapati Sastri’s edition of the Arthaśāstra, Vol. II, p. 156, ll. 5-6; also J. J. Meyer, Das Altindische Buch, p. 953.

3 The implication is that the brilliance of the diamonds was such that they served as the light with which the thief was able to remove them.

4 The reigning Pāṇṭyan king was Neṭuñcellyan. His younger brother’s garland was stolen by a skilled thief.

making the prince attack a jewelled pillar. If anyone of you has seen him, show him to us. Is there any on this earth who is equal to this thief?

Among those who heard this murderous goldsmith, a young executioner with a lance in his hands spoke: 'Once on a dark night in the middle of the rainy season, when all the village was deep in sleep there appeared a thief,¹ with a chisel used for splitting the earth, clothed in blue robes, desirous of jewels, fierce like a tiger. I unsheathed my sword, but he plucked it from my hands and could not afterwards be seen anywhere. Rare indeed are the deeds of thieves. Failure to carry out the king's orders will cause trouble to us. O men of martial valour, say what is to be done.'

At this, an unlettered person, in a fit of drunkenness, hurled his well-polished sword from his hand (upon Kōvalaṇ), cutting him across. The blood that gushed forth from the wound spread over Mother Earth, who felt extreme agony. Vanquished by his pre-destined fate, Kōvalaṇ fell, causing the Pāṇṭyan sceptre to become crooked.

NĒRIṢAI VENPĀ

Because of the injustice done to Kaṇṇaki's husband, the never-crooked sceptre of the Pāṇṭyaṇ, became crooked, —a result of pre-ordained fate. Good and bad actions yield their results unfailingly. Therefore always perform righteous deeds.

¹ See Maturaikkāṇṭi, ll. 639-42. Another instance of a thief and thieving is furnished.

CANTO XVII

ACCIYAR KURAVAI

OR

THE DANCE OF THE COWHERDESSES

‘THE morning drum will soon be heard in the palace of the Pāṇṭyan, famous for his garlanded white umbrella. He is acknowledged ruler of the whole earth by all the kings of Jambūdvīpa, with its cool groves, and even by the Cōla and Cēra who have carved their Tiger¹ and Bow² marks side by side with the Fish³ carved by the Pāṇṭyan himself on the Himalayan crests. It is our turn to supply ghee’, said the elderly lady (Mātari)⁴ calling to her daughter Aiyai, who came out with the churning stick and rope.

URAIPPĀṬṬUMATAI

Then she said :

‘Alas! The milk in the pot has not curdled. The beautiful eyes of the big humped bulls are full of tears; some calamity is happening.

1 The emblem of the Cōla monarch.

2 The ensign of the Cēra.

3 The emblem of the Pāṇṭya monarch. This shows that all the three Tamil kings led Himalayan expeditions.

4 The cowherds evidently supplied the palace with ghee by turn. A similar custom is referred to in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bk. V, ch 15, st. 22. It appears that Kamsā, king of Mathurā, was supplied with milk, and ghee by the cowherds of the Vraja or Gokula. In sending Akrūra to fetch Kṛiṣṇa and his brother Rāma, Kamsā asked Akrūra to tell the cowherds to speed up the supply of milk and ghee to the palace.

‘The fragrant butter in the *uri*¹ does not melt. The lambs do not frisk about; some calamity is happening.

‘Herds of cows with their four-nippled udders are shuddering and bellowing in fear; the big bells (tied to their necks) fall down. O! Some calamity is happening.’²

THAT WHICH IS PROGNOSTICATIVE (KARUPPAM)

The milk in the pot not curdling, the beautiful eyes of the humped bulls being filled with tears, the butter in the uri not melting, the lambs lying without frisking, and the big bells falling down to the earth—all these signs portend some coming evil. Looking at her daughter she (Mātari) said: ‘Do not feel perturbed. To alleviate the grief of our cattle, we shall dance the *kuravai*³ in the presence of Kaṇṇaki, that jewel among the damsels of the earth.

1 A pot suspended in a network of rope or iron.

2 The evil portents which point to an impending calamity according to the belief of the cowherds.

3 After enumerating again the evil portents, the cowherdess told her daughter the remedy to avert the impending calamity. The remedy was kuravai (rāsakrīḍa) the origin of which is traced back to Lord Kṛiṣṇa and his spouse Nappinnai. In commenting on the term rāsa occurring in Viṣṇu Purāṇa (Bk. V, ch. 13, pp. 532-5), H. H. Wilson, the translator, notes the following. ‘The rāsa dance is a dance in which men and women hold each other’s hands and go round in a circle, singing airs varying in melody and tune.’ According to Bharata the number of persons should not exceed sixtyfour. There is a reference to the rāsa-maṇḍala in the Brahmavaivartta Purāṇa where Rādhā is accompanied by thirty-six Gōpis, each of the latter being attended by many inferior personages. In the Brahmavaivartta the maṇḍala is not a ring of dancers but a circle of definite space within which Kṛiṣṇa, Rādhā, and the Gōpis diverted themselves.

Among the many boyhood games¹ played by Māyavaṇ and his elder brother Balarama in the erumaṇṇam of the Āyar-pāṭi,² the kuravai was one. It was played by Māyavaṇ with Piṇṇai of the long lance-like eyes.

REHEARSAL (KOLU)³

1. 'This sweet lady with the garland of flowers loves him who can jump upon the black bull undaunted by its rage,' she said, pointing to a certain damsel.

1 Here is a distinct reference to a number of dramatic performances by the boy Kṛiṣṇa with Balarama and Nappiṇṇai. The kuravai was one such performance. The term nāṭakam cannot be taken in its absolute sense as a dramatic composition.

2 Āyar-pāṭi=the quarters of the cowherds; Gōkulam is perhaps its Sanskrit equivalent. Erumaṇṇam or Tāterumaṇṇam is the public place of the Āyar. It was an open courtyard with a raised platform.

3 It was a custom in the cowherd community for young girls, until they were married, to select their own bulls from the common stall, and to tend them. The bulls would then be let loose, and whichever young cowherd could successfully bring the beast under control in an open contest, was deemed the proper life-partner for the girl. Apparently it was one of the ancient wedding customs among the Āyar. This custom also can be traced to their family deity Kṛiṣṇa, who, tradition affirms, curbed the fury of seven bulls coloured black, white, and brown, and married the girls who were tending them. The Ālvārs, who flourished several centuries after the composition of the Cilappatikāram, also attribute this incident to Kṛiṣṇa. (See Dikshitar's article on 'Kṛiṣṇa in Tamil Literature' in Indian Culture, Vol. IV, No. 3, Calcutta, 1937.) One can see a remnant of this institution surviving today in the form of mimic shows on the Māṭṭu-Pōṅkal day following Pōṅkal festival every year, in the middle of January. Selected bulls are let loose in the villages with new towels and other things tied to their necks or horns. Many people of all castes come from neighbouring villages and take part in the

2. 'The shoulders of this girl with golden brace lets become the possession of him, who can suppress the bull with red spots¹ on its forehead.

3. 'This girl with her beautiful hair decked with jasmine flowers is the recognized bride for him who can mount that strong young bull.

4. 'The shoulders of this creeper-like damsel will be owned by him who can crush the bull with the small white spots.

5. 'The soft breasts of this creeper-like girl are the possession of him who can overcome the bull with the golden spots.

6. 'This damsel with her beauteous hair decked with konrai flowers, become the wife of him who can mount that victorious young bull.

7. 'This girl resembling burgeoning flowers will be of right his, who can control the milk-white bull.'

STRINGEND (ETUTTUKKĀTTU)²

(Then the elderly Mātari proceeded to allocate their places in the dance) saying to her daughter that these seven contest to bring the animal under control. But now it has lost all connexion with marriage.

1 Cf. Kalittokai, 'Mullai', ch. 4, st. 65 in this connexion. The expression used is nericclvalai.

2 The seven girls selected for the kuravai dance were those who tended bulls in their cattle-stalls for the sake of getting suitable husbands. The song sung stated who was for whom. In this particular performance the seven maidens represented the seven strings of the yāl in their order and were named after each respective string.

young damsels had selected seven bulls from the cattle stall and nourished them.

She made them stand in the traditional order (according to the arrangement of the seven strings in the yāl) and gave them names appropriate to their acting.¹ Beginning from the western end, the regular places (of these girls) were kural, tuttam, kaikkiḷai, uḷai, iḷi, viḷari and tāram. These are the names which were given by the fragrant haired lady (Mātari).

She (who stood at the place) of the kural was named Māyavaṇ. She (who stood at the place) of iḷi was called (by the name of) the victorious Balarāma. She (who stood at the place) of tuttam represented the cowherdess Pinṇai. The others were named in the order described above.²

Pinṇai and tāram were then joined to Māyavaṇ; uḷai and viḷari joined the white Balarāma. Kaikkiḷai stood to the left of Pinṇai. The good viḷari stood to the right of tāram (muttai, also munṭai).

Among them,

She who garlanded Māyavaṇ with the luxurious tulasi garland, would perform the faultless kuravai dance. Is pinṇai of bangled arms so beautiful that He who had won great reputation by measuring the universe, would not look at Lakṣmī dwelling in his own breast? Ha! Ha!

So said Mātari (in great glee).

¹ This is called vaṭṭappālai. For a detailed description see Abraham Pandīthar's Karuṇāmṛtasāgaram.

² Kaikkiḷai, uḷai, viḷari, and tāram. High and low pitched strings are called tāra and mandara. See Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bk. V, ch. 13, st. 6.

THE DANCE (KÜTTUḤPAṬUTAL)

They then¹ stood evenly in the form of a circle, and clasping their fingers in the karkaṭaka pose,² began the dance in that posture. In the beginning the girl representing the kural looked at her neighbour the tuttam and said, 'We shall sing with the sweet paṇ called mullai, in honour of Him who broke the *kurunta*³ tree in an extensive upland (of the Gōkula).'

Thus saying, (the damsel representing) the kural began to sing in a low tone, (the damsel representing) the iḷi to sing in a level tone, and (the damsel representing) the tuttam to sing in a high tone. The low singer representing viḷari in her low pitch followed the tone of her ally representing the tuttam.

THE SONG (PĀṬṬU)

1. O friend! If Māyavaṇ (Lord Kṛṣṇa), who used a calf as a stick to knock down (vilā) fruits,⁴ comes here among our cattle, shall we not hear Him playing on his fine koṇrai flute?⁵

1 What follows is a description of the actual dance.

2 The karkaṭaka pose was made by each dancer bending her middle finger and ring finger in front, and joining the other two with the respective two fingers of the maid next to her, and so on, the blg finger being excepted. In that posture each pair of clasped hands resembled a crab (karkaṭa).

3 The kurunta tree is a species of wild lime (Atalantia). This was one of the heroic exploits attributed to Kṛṣṇa. It is said that a demon stood in the form of a tree to deceive and kill Kṛṣṇa. This was perceived by the god who killed the demon by uprooting the tree.

4 Bālakṛiḍa of Kṛṣṇa, Cf. Bhāga. Pur., Bk. X, ch. 18, st. 12-15.

5 Koṇrai, āmpal and mullai are referred to. Five kinds of flutes are said to have been in existence.

the crown of Indra,¹ whose weapon is the victorious thunder, strike terror among his enemies and every day proclaim his victory!

1 See the Tiruvilāyālpurāṇam, § 44. It must be noted that the poet attributes the heroic exploits of an ancestor of the Paṇḍya king to the ruling monarch. The idea is that he belongs to a distinguished line of kings.

THE GARLAND OF SORROW

OR

TUNPA MALAI

CANTO XVIII

THESE the elderly cowerdness of dynamic charm¹ went to bathe and to worship with flowers, incense, sandal-paste, and garlands, Netumal² on the bank of the deep Vaikai.
Towards the close of the kuravai dance someone³ who had heard a cry in the city came back in haste.

She said nothing; but stood without opening her mouth to Kaṇṇaki, who said :

‘O! friend, speak, speak out.

‘I do not see my husband. My mind is in a flutter.
The air expelled from my lungs surpasses the air (driven into the fire) from bellows. If the air expelled from my

1 The expression in the text aiya cayaiai. While the Arum-pataurai sees in sayalai a reference to Aiyai. Aiyārkkuṇaḷai interprets it as some other lady. Both do not seem to fit.

2 Sri Iruntavaḷamūḍaiyar or Antaravaṇattemperuman. The offerings to the god consisted of flowers, sandal-paste, etc. In India the end of the most important festivals and rituals was marked by a sacred bath, the avabhr̥tasnānam of Sanskrit literature. See Sentamili, Vol. VIII, p. 183 f.

3 This may refer to Aiyai or any other lady. It is here taken as a reference to Aiyai, from the fact that Kaṇṇaki addresses her as friend and companion later on. From this we have to infer that only Aiyai's mother Mātari went to the river and the temple there, while Aiyai remained at home. Or, Mātari who went to the river, heard the news and returned post-haste.

CANTO XVIII

TUNPA MALAI

OR

THE GARLAND OF SORROW

THERE the elderly cowherdess of dynamic charm¹ went to bathe and to worship with flowers, incense, sandal-paste, and garlands, Neṭumāl² on the bank of the deep Vaikai. Towards the close of the kuravai dance someone³ who had heard a cry in the city came back in haste.

She said nothing; but stood without opening her mouth to Kaṇṇaki, who said :

‘O! friend, speak, speak out.

‘I do not see my husband. My mind is in a flutter. The air expelled from my lungs surpasses the air (driven into the fire) from bellows. If the air expelled from my

1 The expression in the text āṭiya cāyalāḷ. While the Arum-patavurai sees in śāyalāḷ a reference to Alyai. Aṭiyārkunallār interprets it as some other lady. Both do not seem to fit.

2 Śrī Iruntavaḷamudalyār or Antaravāṇattemperumāṇ. The offerings to the god consisted of flowers, sandal-paste, etc. In India the end of the most important festivals and rituals was marked by a sacred bath, the avabhṛtasnānam of Sanskrit literature. See Śentamīl, Vol. VIII, p. 183 f.

3 This may refer to Alyai or any other lady. It is here taken as a reference to Alyai, from the fact that Kaṇṇaki addresses her as friend and companion later on. From this we have to infer that only Aiyai’s mother Mātari went to the river and the temple there, while Alyai remained at home. Or, Mātari who went to the river, heard the news and returned post-haste.

lungs surpasses the air from bellows, will you not tell me what is being said in city?¹ Long live you, friend !

‘Even during daytime a fit of shivering² takes hold of me. Not seeing my beloved, my heart is restless with grief. As my mind is restless with grief at not seeing my beloved, tell me what it is that people said. Bless you, my friend.

‘I seek your aid, friend! I do not see my lord returning. I scent some danger; my mind faints. As my mind faints at something hidden from me, I pray you, my friend, tell me, what it is that they (eñcalār)³ said (in the city).

She replied :

‘O! Saying that he was the thief who silently stole the glittering anklet from the palace, the king’s residence—that he was the thief who silently stole—the men who wore jingling anklets executed him.’

Hearing this, Kaṇṇaki sprang up in rage and then fell down on the earth, as if the rising moon had fallen with the clouds on the wide earth.⁴ She wept making her red eyes redder. She cried out, ‘O! Where are you, my dear husband? Ah! Ah!’, and fell down in a swoon.

(Recovering, she again continued to rave)

1 Ētilār is the term for people of the same neighbourhood.

2 Generated by extreme fear.

3 Eñcalār is the term for ‘others’, ‘strangers’. The citizens of this place were strangers to Kaṇṇaki who had only arrived that day.

4 The moon is compared to Kaṇṇaki’s face and the clouds to locks of her hair.

‘Like the distressed women who keep difficult vows after their loving husbands have been burnt in fire,¹ am I to perish in misery, because I have lost my loving husband through the fault of the king censured by his subjects?

‘Like the distressed women who, after losing their husbands who had worn fragrant garlands on their broad chests, go in despair to many places of pilgrimage² and bathe therein, am I to perish in anguish, O foolish goddess of Dharma,³ through the fault of the king wielding the sceptre of injustice?

‘Like the afflicted women, who are ever plunged into hard vows of widowhood after their beloved husbands have fallen a prey to the funeral fire, am I to pine away in grief, losing fame in this life also, through the wrong committed by the Pāṇṭyan, whose sceptre swerved from the righteous path?

1 It transpires from this that cremation and not burial was customary and that widows led a life of fasting and arduous penance. They cared no more for their mortal bodies.

2 Even today Hindu widows go on pilgrimages after the decease of their husbands to bathe in the waters of holy rivers and pools in order to obtain final salvation. Bathing in tirthas and fasting are generally practised by women after the death of their husbands. It may be noted that the practice of suttee was not the rule but only the exception. We may call attention here to a statement of the Maṇimēkalai, canto ii, ll. 42-50, where three classes of women are distinguished.

3 According to Arumpatavuraiyāciriyar, the term aram stands here for the deity of righteousness or the Goddess of Dharma. Kaṇṇaki addresses the deity as a foolish Goddess for She was a witness of the king's injustice towards her innocent husband. This suggests the belief that Fate is more powerful than Gods, and its laws cannot be transgressed.

‘O! Look at me.

‘Hear my words,¹ O all you good damsels of the cowherd community who have gathered here, and have with foresight, engaged yourselves in the kuravai!² Hear my words! Hear, all of you cowherd girls!

‘O, Lord of the hot rays!³ You who are a witness for all the deeds of this seagirt world, speak! Is my husband a thief?’

Then was heard a voice from the welkin: ‘He is not a thief, O, lady of carp-like eyes! This city will be consumed by blazing flames.’

1 ll. 47-53 are quoted by Naccl_nārkk_iṇiyar in commenting on Tol_k., ‘Ceyyul’., sūtra 149.

2 Kaṇṇaki pays a tribute to the cowherdesses who anticipated a calamity and danced the kuravai to avert it.

3 The reference is to the Sun-god. Kaṇṇaki who had already addressed the Dharmadēvatā now appealed to the Sun. According to tradition the Sun is supposed to be the unfailing witness of all acts and deeds. She demanded from the Sun-god an answer to her question: ‘Is my husband a thief?’ The Sun immediately replied: ‘No’. In ancient times the sun cult was universal. Greece and Rome took to the worship of the sun, and Plato in the Republic idealizes the Sun as ‘the author of all light and life in the material world’. A great part of the oldest Vēdic rituals are permeated with the worship of the sun implicitly as well as explicitly. There was also the Mithraism of ancient Persia.

CANTO XIX
URSULVARI
OR

THE TALK OF THE TOWN

So said the Sun. She of the sparkling armlets wasted no more time. Taking in her hands the remaining anklet she lamented: 'O women of chastity who live in this city ruled by the unjust king ! Listen to this.

'I have suffered incomparable distress this evening. That which should not occur, has occurred to me. How can I endure it ? See this injustice.

'Is my husband a thief? They¹ killed him, unwilling to pay the price² of my anklet. What injustice !

'Shall I ever see (again) my beloved husband in the company of you all, O women of great chastity? See this injustice !

'If I shall see my loving husband, shall I hear him utter the longed-for words, that he was not in the wrong? See this injustice !

1 According to Aṭiyārkunallār the use of the verb in the plural shows that the responsibility for the deed did not merely rest with the king but with his ministers also. If this interpretation has any value, it bears testimony to the fact that the king could not and did not act on his own initiative but consulted and took the previous advice of his cabinet. It is not clear whether in this particular case the advice was taken. It can be presumed, however, that on such consultation was held.

2 The implication here is that her anklet was so valuable that the king could not pay the full price for it and hence wanted

‘If I do not hear him say that he was not in the wrong, condemn me by saying that I did unjust things.¹ Listen to this !’

All the residents of the flourishing city of Madura beheld the afflicted woman and were moved by her suffering agonies. In bewilderment they exclaimed; ‘Since irremediable wrong has been done to this woman,² the unbending³ and righteous sceptre of the king has been bent. What is (the meaning of) this?

‘Lost is the glory of Tennavan, the king of kings (Pāṇṭya), possessor of the moonlike umbrella and the spear.⁴ What is (the meaning of) this?

‘The sheltering umbrella of the victorious king that had cooled the earth now generates heat. What is (the meaning of) this?

to deprive her husband of it by killing him. To that extent the king alone was the thief according to Kaṇṇaki.

1 She vows that she will make her dead husband rise up and say that he was in the right and the king was in the wrong. This is in keeping with the prescription of the Kural that chaste ladies could do and undo anything. See Cila. (Tamil ed.), pp. 245, 315, 555.

2 The sympathy of the women of Madura goes out to Kaṇṇaki. They condemn the king’s action, and seem to endow her with divinity.

3 This is an important statement as it suggests that the Pāṇṭyan rule was tainted with unrighteousness for the first time. Here we may recall the words of the Brahmana Kausikan at the commencement of canto xiii in which he paid a glowing tribute to the Pāṇṭyan rule.

4 The umbrella and the spear were symbols of grace and prowess respectively (see Perumpāṇ., l. 422).

‘A new, great goddess has now come before us bearing in her hand an anklet of pure gold. What is (the meaning of) this?’

‘This afflicted woman, weeping from her beautiful, red, and collyrium-stained eyes, looks as one possessed of divinity. What is (the meaning of) it?’

Saying such things, the people of Madura sympathized with her and comforted her by raising their accusing voices. Among those who caused the tumult, some showed (to Kaṇṇaki) the body of her (murdered) husband. She, the golden creeper, saw him; but her he could not see.

At that moment the red-rayed sun withdrew his fiery rays and hid himself in the great mountain, causing the vast world to be enveloped in darkness.¹ In the brief twilight of that evening the flowery creeper-like Kaṇṇaki lamented aloud and the whole city reverberated with her cry. She who in the morning had received from her embracing husband the flower-wreath worn by him and decked her tresses with it, saw him that evening in a pool of blood gushing from his wounds. But he did not see her in an agony of grief. She then mourned for him in sorrow and wrath:²

‘O! Seeing me in deep affliction and without a word of consolation, is it fit that your body, fair as the fairest gold, should lie here in the dust? Will not people say that it was my inevitable fate³ that made the righteous king act thus wrongly in ignorance?’

1 The poet wants to impress upon us the idea that that sight was so horrible that even the sun shut his eyes. In other words ‘the sun set and night came’.

2 Kaṇṇaki wants the people to accuse her and not the king for her misfortune.

3 The poet repeats in a number of places his belief in past karmā and its results.

‘Is it just that, in this elusive twilight with none to aid me, your garlanded beautiful breast should lie on the bare ground, before me who pine in lonely grief? Will no people say that it was my pre-ordained fate which made the Pāṇṭyan commit a wrong, that the whole world proclaimed unjust?

‘Is it right that you should be lying here in the dust with blood gushing from your gaping wounds, in front of me, the unfortunate one, whose eyes are brimming with unceasing tears? Though his subjects accuse the Pāṇṭyan who committed the crime, will not good people say that it is the result of my past actions?

‘Are there women¹ here, are there women? Are there women who can endure such injustice done to their wedded husbands? Are there such women?

‘Are there good people? Are there good people here? Are there good people who nurture and fend for children born of them? Are there good people here?

‘Is there a god? Is there a god? Is there a god in this Kūṭal whose king’s sharp sword killed an innocent? Is there a god?’

While she lamented in this manner, and embraced the breast of her husband, where (once) the goddess of wealth had resided, he stood up exclaiming: ‘O the full moon face has faded!’ and wiped away her tears with his hands.²

1 According to Kaṇṇaki such injustice could not be perpetrated where good women, good men and gods live. In brief, she regards it as a god-forsaken place.

2 This means that the wounded Kōvalan lay in a state of unconsciousness for a long time, and smitten by a flash of consciousness, he rose up to look at her changed face for the last time, and removed her tears. He died with his last words, ‘Stay

The fair lady fell to the ground, sobbing and wailing, and clasped the feet of her revered husband with both her bangled hands. Then he arose and discarded his mortal form and departed surrounded by a host of gods, saying as he went: 'O, my dear, stay; stay here.'

She cried out then: 'Is this illusion? What else is it? Is it a spirit that has deceived me? Where shall I go and find the truth of this? Else I will not seek for my husband till my furious wrath is appeased. I will meet the cruel king (tivēntaṇ) and ask him for an explanation of his action'. So saying she arose. As she stood up, she recollected her terrible dream, and her long carp-like eyes were overflowing with tears. She stood up and remembered it.¹ Wiping away her tears she went to the front gate of the king's palace.

here!' It is for students of psychology to explain this state of the mind of a dying man. But the poet puts it in such a way that we are moved to tears.

1 This apparently refers to the dream which Kaṇṇaki dreamt and recounted to Dēvanti, before setting out for Madura (see canto ix, ll. 45-54).

CANTO XX

VALAKKURAI KATAI¹

OR

THE DEMAND FOR JUSTICE

AT that time (the queen narrates her dream) :²

‘Alas! I saw, I saw (in my dream) the sceptre fall and the umbrella. The bell³ at the palace-gate shook itself and tinkled as it quaked.

‘Alas! I also saw, I saw the eight cardinal points agitated; and darkness swallowed the sun. Alas! I also saw, I saw an iridescent rainbow in the night;⁴ a meteor glowing with heat fell by day. Alas!’

THAT WHICH IS PROGNOSTICATIVE

‘The righteous sceptre and the white umbrella falling upside down to the hard ground; the bell at the gate of our victorious king’s palace quivering and making the mind shiver with fear; the rainbow appearing in the night, the meteor falling by day; the eight cardinal points in a state of agitation; all these indicate some impending calamity. I shall inform the king of it.’

1 There is no commentary of Aṭṭiyārkunallār available for this and the succeeding ten cantos.

2 The queen who was fast asleep, woke up and recalled her dream indicative of evil portents to the State.

3 Kaṭaimaṇi or the bell of justice, also called ārayiccimaṇi in Tamil literature. See Kamba-Rāmayaṇa, ‘Bāla’.

4 A rainbow seen in the night is considered a sign of impending calamity. Or is it a reference to a comet?

Followed then by maids decorated with sparkling and radiant jewels, some of them bearing her looking-glass and others her ornaments, and surrounded by many hunchbacks, dwarfs, mutes and other menials, some carrying new clothes, some carrying silks, some carrying betel-boxes, some carrying paints, some carrying pastes, some carrying the musk of deer, some carrying garlands, some carrying wreaths, some carrying feather-fans, and others carrying incense. Several ladies with fragrant flowers in their hair sang praise thus: 'Long live the great queen of the Pāṇṭyan (Peruntēvi)¹ protecting the vast world', and followed again by her companions and bodyguards making obeisance, and speaking in praise of her, the great queen (Kōpperuntēvi) approached king Tennavan in whose bosom Lakṣmī ever dwells, and communicated her evil dream to him who was sitting on the lion-throne.

Just then was heard a cry: 'O, you gate-keeper!² O, gate-keeper! O, you gate-keeper of him who has lost his wisdom, and whose virtueless heart deviated from the path of kingly justice,³ go tell (the king) that one who bears an anklet from a pair of tinkling anklets, and who has lost her husband, waits at the gate. O, tell him that.'

At this the gate-keeper approached the king, saying:

1 The Arumpatavurai calls the queen tampirāṭṭi. The editor draws our attention to the fact that even today in the Malainātu the king and the queen go by the technical terms tampirān and tampirāṭṭi.

2 The doorkeeper addressed by Kaṇṇaki was an official of the royal household, the dauvārika of Sanskrit literature.

3 The term used in the text is iraimurai (Sanskrit, rājanīti).

‘Long live our lord of Kor̥kai:¹ long live the lord of the southern mountain; long live Seliyaṇ;² long live Tenṇavaṇ; long live Pañcavaṇ, unstigmatized by calumny!

‘Someone waits at the gate. She is not the deity Kor̥ravai, the goddess of victory,³ holding in her hand the victorious spear, and standing upon the nape of the buffalo with an unceasing gush of blood from its fresh wound. Nor is she Aṇaṅku (Bhadrakālī),⁴ youngest sister of the seven virgins, who made Śiva dance; nor even is she the Kālī of the forest⁵ which is the residence of ghosts and goblins; nor again is she the goddess that tore up the mighty chest of Dāruka.⁶ She appears to be filled with

1 The quondam capital of the Pāṇṭyaṇ kingdom.

2 Seliyaṇ like Tenṇavaṇ is another Pāṇṭyaṇ title. Pañcavaṇ is yet another title.

3 Mahiṣāsura-mardani.

4 Piṭāṇi (also Cāmuṇṭi) one of the seven lōkamātas. (Also known as mahā-māyā.) The names of these mother-goddesses are mentioned in the Purāṇas. The Purāṇas also speak of the fourteen daughters of Dakṣa married to the progenitor Kaśyapa, as lōkamātas. It is also said that Cāmuṇṭi was responsible for making Śiva dance. This dance was, perhaps, ūrdhvatāṇḍavam which tradition records in the shrine of Tiruvālaṅkāṭu, near Madras.

5 It is to be noted that Kālī is different from Bhadrakālī.

6 The Goddess who killed the asura Dāruka. This mighty asura engaged in austere penance for which he was blessed by Brahmā and told that he would not be killed by a Dēva, asura, man or any other creature or weapon either in the day or night. He was lording over the whole universe, and the chief gods attacked him in vain. Angry at his behaviour, a Kālī came out of Śiva's third eye, and she was sent against Dāruka. But even she could not equal him as he had the knowledge of a secret mantra which he and his wife alone knew. Umā went in the guise of a Brahmana lady to his wife and offered to pray for her resentment. She seems to swell with rage. She has lost her husband; she has in her hand an anklet of gold, and she waits at the gate.'¹

The king said : 'Let her come: bring her here!' Then the gate-keeper brought her and showed to her the monarch and she went near the ruling king, who said :

'O lady with the tear-stained face, who art thou, my young lady? What has brought thee hither before us ?'

She replied :

'Inconsiderate king! I have something to say. I am a native of much celebrated Pukār, one of whose kings of untarnished glory once allayed the suffering of a dove² to the wonderment of gods, and another sacrificed at his husband's life with her and thus learned the mantra. Then in the evening Kālī challenged him again and killed him. This Kālī is said to be Bhadrakālī whose cult is now prevalent in Malabar. The Malabar legends Kālikarpam and Badrōtpatti furnish details of this story. Cf. the article entitled 'A Note on Kali or Bhagavati cult of Kerala', by C. Achyuta Menon in S. K. Aiyangar's Commemoration Volume (1936), pp. 234-39.

1 The gate-keeper's first impression of Kaṇṇaki is that she looked like Mahiṣāsuramardanī, Cāmuṇḍī, or Kālī.

2 The story of Śibi. Cf. Puṛam., st. 37, 39 etc. Kuralvenpā 72, Parimēlaḷakar, comment. The original story is contained in the epic Mahābhārata. Śibi was a monarch of the solar race and renowned for his kindness to animals. Once a dove fell into his lap and asked him to protect it from the pursuit of a hawk. The hawk demanded of the king either the dove or flesh from his body equal to its weight. The king offered to give his flesh and cut it from his thigh and from other parts of his body. The weight proved unequal to that of the dove. He therefore offered his whole body to be weighed and thereby saved the poor dove from being killed.

chariot-wheel his dear and only son¹, grieved at the sight of a cow whose eyes were filled with pearl-like tears and who rang the bell at the palace-gate (for justice). From that city, Kōvalan, the son of the merchant Mācattuvan, belonging to a reputed and exalted family of faultless name, driven by fate, entered your city, O king with tinkling anklets, to earn his livelihood, when he was murdered by you while out to sell my anklet. I am his wife. My name is Kaṇṇaki.'

The king replied: 'Divine lady, it is not injustice to put a thief to death. Know that it is kingly justice.'²

The lustrous lady retorted:

'O Lord of Korkai, you have fallen from your righteous course! My golden anklet contains gems inside.'

'O lady,' said the king, 'what you said now is well said. Our anklet contains pearls inside. Give it here.' It was given and placed before him. Kaṇṇaki then broke open her beautiful anklet, and a gem flew into the king's face. When he saw that gem, the king, with his umbrella falling and his sceptre faltering, said: 'Am I a ruler—I who have listened to the words of a goldsmith? It is I who am the thief. The protection of the subjects of the southern kingdom has failed in my hands for the first time. Let me³ depart from this life.' Speaking thus

1 Maṇunitikaṇṭa Cōlan. Cf. paḷamoḷi. st. 93; Kuraḷvenpā 547, Paṛimēlaḷakar, comment. He had his son crushed under the wheels of a chariot, because his own vehicle had accidentally run over a calf, for which its mother, the cow, pleaded for justice by approaching the palace and ringing the bell of justice with its horns. (See Dikshitar, Studies in Tamil Literature, p. 191).

2 Rājanīti, also Daṇṭanīti.

3 The king's sense of justice led to his extreme repentance and final collapse.

the king fell down in a swoon, and his great queen collapsed and shuddered saying : 'It is impossible for woman to replace the loss of a husband.'¹ Worshipping both his feet, she fell down.² Poor woman !

VENPĀ

1. The saying of several assembly-men, that dharma will become the god to Death to those who do sinful deeds, is not wrong. O queen of the conquering king who did an unjust and cruel deed ! I have indeed committed a great sin.³ See what I shall do.

2. Seeing me and terrified at me, the sinner with tears flowing from my red eyes, with the matchless anklet in my hand, with a body which seemed bereft of life, and with my dark forest-like tresses of hair, the Lord of Kūṭal became a corpse.⁴

1 People who lose their parents may be consoled, but not women who lose their husbands. The idea is that husbands are their very lives; without them women are dead to the world. Any relative can be substituted, but not a husband. The poet puts these words into the mouth of the queen when the king collapsed, but their significance is increased by their being addressed to Kaṇṇaki. This can be fitly compared with the statement in the Rāmayaṇa where Vālmiki puts into the mouth of Rāma a statement to the effect that wives and relatives can be found in every country but no country can give one one's own brother. The verse runs as follows.

dēśe dēśe kaṇṭratrāni dēśe dēśe ca bāndhawāḥ |
tantu.dēśam na paśyāmi yatra bhrātā sahōdaraḥ ||

2 The queen fell down unconscious, but not dead.

3 The caption venpā marked above this stanza seems out of place for these words are spoken by Kaṇṇaki to the queen who fell down in extreme sorrow.

4 Again Kaṇṇaki's utterance.

3. The moment the Lord of Vaikai saw the dust on her (Kannaki's) body, her dark hair hanging loose, her tears, and the matchless anklet in her hand he was overwhelmed.¹ And the moment his ears received the words of the lady he gave up his life.

1 It is doubtful in the light of the expression அக்காரிகை whether the third stanza of the venpā contains Kannaki's words. It seems to be the statement of the author, for Kannaki cannot speak of herself as அக்காரிகை.

CANTO XXI

VANCINA MALAI

OR

THE GREAT WRATH

(THE SEVEN WOMEN OF CHASTITY)

KANNAKI spoke thus to the Paṇṭyan queen :

‘O, Dēvi of the great king! I am one pursued by cruel fate. Though by nature I am ignorant yet you will see that he who did harm to another in the forenoon will find himself harmed in the afternoon.’¹

At midday a lady² with abundant locks of hair called upon the vaṇṇi tree and the kitchen³ to bear evidence to her chastity.

When a woman with a wide, striped alkul was told by her companions that her husband was a figure of sand upon the banks of Poṇṇi (Kāvēri), she remained⁴ there

1 See Kuṛaḷveṇpā 319; Perunkatai, st. 56, l. 259.

2 Kaṇṇaki narrates the legends of seven women of Pukār who had won a name for their exemplary chastity.

3 This tradition is still current in Tiruppurampayam and Tirumaru-kal. The Lord enshrined at the former place goes by the name of Śākṣīnātha. See Dr. Swaminatha Aiyar’s note. A similar legend is recorded in what is known as Sāṇṇaḷaitta Tiru-ṣāḷaḷaḷaḷ (st. 62) where the vaṇṇi tree, the God Siva and a well are cited as witnesses.

4 The moment the woman, who was apparently a widow, heard from her companions that the sandy figure was that of her husband, she did not return home but stood firm in that place lest the figure should be destroyed by floods. Even today it is a without returning home even when the waves encircled her without ruining her husband's image.

The daughter of the celebrated king Karikāla¹ followed the floods which carried away her husband, Vañcikkōn,² calling aloud: 'O, my lover with hlll-like shoulders!' Then the sea itself came and presented her husband before her. She, the golden creeper, returned embracing him.

There was the lady (in the form of a stone) who remained in the park by the seashore looking at the approaching vessels. After the return of her husband, she cast off her form of stone.³

There was another lady with lancelike eyes who, when her co-wife's child had accidentally fallen into a well, dropped her child also into it and thus saved both the children.⁴

custom among some classes for the chaste wife to go to the river bank, make an image of her husband in sand and after making offerings to it, to cast off the clothes she was wearing and to put on new ones.

1 See Kuruntokai, st. 31; Akam., st. 45, 76, etc. The name of Karikāla's daughter was Ātīmanti, also Manti, (Akam.); Tolka. Akattinaḷ, sūtra 54 Naccinārkkiniyar's gloss. She seems to be younger than Auvvāiyār, the great Caṅkam poetess. This shows that not only Tamil princes but princesses also were poets. Tamil women were highly learned.

2 Also Āṭṭanatti or merely Atti. The incident referred to took place at Kaḷār on the banks of the Kāvēri. See Dr. Swaminatha Aiyar's detailed note (Sila. Tamil ed., p. 488).

3 The fourth lady turned herself into a stone when her husband went overseas, but assumed her original form on his return. Though not a parallel, the Akalyā legend in the Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmiki affords a comparison Akalyā, once turned into a stone, assumed her original form at the touch of Rāma.

4 The fifth lady dropped her own child into the well after her co-wife's child, when in her custody, had fallen in to it. Then

Seeing a stranger staring at her with lascivious eyes, a lady changed her full-moon face into that of a monkey. When her departed husband returned, that flower-soft lady, with pure gems on her alkul gave up her monkey face.¹

Last there was the lady, beautiful as a golden image, who overheard her mother speaking thus to her (the girl's) father: 'Without paying heed to the wise saying of the learned,² that a woman's wisdom is fraught with folly, in the course of our play, I told my maid servant, "If I give birth to a daughter, and if you, O, maid of lustrous armlets, give birth to a son, he will be my daughter's husband."' She has borne this in mind, and now demands their wedlock. I hear this with pain, my mind is much exercised. How unfortunate I am!' At this, she who looked like a golden image (even before the proposal from her parents) dressed herself in a new silken robe, tied up the tresses of her hair, approaching the son (of the maid) prostrated herself before him, and bore his feet on her head!³

'I was born in that city (Pukār) in which such great women of fragrant tresses⁴ were born. If these things happened truly, and if I am also a chaste lady, I shall not allow this city to flourish but will destroy it along with its sovereign. You will see the truth of this.'

she started a hue and cry and with the help of her neighbours saved both children. She thus hoped to be above reproach.

1 Assuming forms at will shows the force and power at the back of chastity, the virtue of virtues.

2 Cf. Īraḥ, sūtra 23.

3 Having overheard the promise made by her mother to her maid-servant—before her birth—to give her to that maid's son, she volunteered to marry him when the time came.

4 See Paṭṭinattupīṭṭiyār Purāṇam for a slightly changed version of the tale of seven women (Pūmpukār Carukkam).

(After speaking thus) she left that place and cried out: 'O, men and women of Madura of the four temples (māṭam)!'¹ O, gods in the heavens! and O, ye saints! Listen to me. I curse this capital of him who did wrong to my beloved husband. I am not to blame.'

Then she twisted off her left breast with her hand, and going round the city of Madura thrice making this vow, in deep anguish, she threw that beautiful breast whirling into the fragrant street. Before this illustrious lady who had made this vow, appeared the god of fire, with flames, in the form of a Brahmana, blue in hue, his tuft like the red sky, and with milk-white teeth, saying: 'O, chaste lady!'² As I long ago received the order that I should destroy this city by fire on the day on which you would be cruelly wronged, who can escape death here?'³

The wrathful Kaṇṇaki then ordered: 'Spare'⁴ Brahmanas, the righteous⁵, cows, chaste women, the aged and

1 The four are named Tiruvālavāi, Tirunaḷḷāru, Tirumuṭ-ankal, Tirunaṭuvūr. According to Naccinārkkinīyar, Kali., st, 92, the four are Kaṇṇi, Kariyamāl, Kāḷi and Ālavāi. See Cila.
(Tamil ed.), p. 490. It would appear that the name Kūṭal was derived from these four temples of which a description is given in Sambandar's Tēvāram.

2 A description of the god of fire as he appeared before Kaṇṇaki. On the Agni cult there is an interesting contribution by Dr J. P. H. Vogel in Ind. Ant., December 1913.

3 This means that Agni asked Kaṇṇaki who should be spared.

4 This shows that the slaughter of innocents was not countenanced at any stage or in any manner. It is interesting that Brahmanas were exempted, surely having evoked respect for their learning and character. These must have been the Śrōtriyaś often mentioned in Sanskrit epics and lawbooks. See Dikshitar Hindu Administrative Institutions, pp. 187-9.

5 This shows that members of other castes who were wedded to svadharma were also spared.

children, but go towards unrighteous people.' And the city of Kūṭal, belonging to the king of the mighty chariot,¹ was enveloped by fumes and flames.

VENPĀ²

When the glorious Pāṇṭyan, his maidens, palaces, army with its shining bows, and elephants, were consumed by the fire of chastity, the immortal gods of that unfortunate city went out of sight because of their great purity.

1 The Pāṇṭyan was noted for his chariot force.

2 This venpā. says the editor of the text, is not found in certain manuscripts.

CANTO XXII

ALARPATU KATAI

OR

THE CONFLAGRATION

(IN Madura) the burning mouth of the messenger god (Agni)¹ opened itself. The guardian deities² closed their doors.³ In order to prove to Mother Earth that his rule was righteous, Ceḷiyaṇ, the warrior king of kings, gave up his very life on account of the dishonour caused by his bent sceptre.⁴ Not knowing that the king was dead on his

1 The god Agni is ministering to the wants of the Dēvas. Hence the epithet Dēvadūta in Vēdic literature. The rationale of all religious offerings to Agni is that he takes them to the respective gods and pitṛs to whom such havis were intended.

2 Among the guardian deities of the city are mentioned the four caste-būtam:—the Brahmana-būtam, the Kṣātriya-būtam, the Vaiśya-būtam and the Vēḷāṇ-būtam. This proves that the social polity Varṇāśramadharmā had come to this part of India at a much earlier period. It may be noted that different colours—white, red, brown and black—are assigned to these respective varṇas showing that once the division of communities was according to colour.

3 'That they closed their doors' means 'that they gave up their legitimate function of defending the four gates of the city walls'.

4 The poet skilfully weaves beautiful ideas into the text. When the straight sceptre hung its head, it seemed to give a message to the king's mind that unless he sacrificed himself it would not come back to its original pristine straightness of justice. The rapid march of ideas—the rod of justice bending, the king dying, and the rod attaining its original form—is all vividly described.

throne¹ along with his queen of untarnished chastity, the purōhita,² the astrologer, the Brahmana judges, the financier (Kāviti),³ and the learned ministers, attended by the palace-servants, and maid-attendants, stood speechless like a group in a painted picture.⁴ (At that time) the elephant-riders,⁵ cavalymen, charioteers, and the *Marava*⁶ soldiers with terrible swords, were bewildered by the fire at the victorious gate of the king's palace, and were permitted to leave.

The presiding deity of the Ādibūtam,⁷ [whose body shedding its cool and lustrous rays like a cluster of pearls, was white as the moon, wore a brilliant pearl necklace along with other ornaments, and had on his shining tuft a wreath of white lotus, arukai, nanti and other

1 Araśukattil is the term used in the text for the throne.

2 The executive officers of the king are mentioned. The purōhita is mentioned first showing the high dignity which was attached to his office. For the place of the purōhita, in the scheme of ancient Indian polity, see Dikshitar, Hindu Admin.-Institutions, ch. iii, sec. 2.

3 Kāviti is perhaps the technical term for the Superintendent of Finance. For different meanings of the expression see the Tamil Lexicon, p. 903.

4 This is an indication of the flourishing state of painting in the early centuries of the Christian era.

5 The traditional fourfold forces are given. The fourfold army had come to stay in the Tamil land.

6 The term Marava may mean a hardy warrior.

7 A full description of the Vedic Brahmana and his outfit. The Brahmana-būtam was an ideal example for the members of that community to copy and follow. The description is told twice in certain particulars. Lines 16-33 are not found in certain manuscripts and from the redundant nature of the description, they can be taken as interpolations.

flowers. He was robed in the purest white, thin silk, not yet dry, and his breast was painted with paste made from the unblossomed vaṭṭikai, the bright dust of vaṇṇikai (sandal) and kōṭṭam. He consumed heartily the sacrificial smoke, caused by the pouring of honey, milk and jaggery (into the fire),¹ and moved in the forenoon from the bathing ghats and the temple of the gods, to halls of Vēdic chanting.² He would stand on his feet at midday and go to his home in the afternoon, holding in his hands an unfolded umbrella, a staff, a water-bowl, a fire-stick,³ and inseparable kusa grass, with the Vēdas on his tongue and his sacred thread on his breast] without deviating from the established procedure, would kindle the three fires⁴ with the sacrificial utensils as ordained by Brahmā.

Next was the grēat deity of the Kṣatriya-būtam,⁵ [whose body was the colour of the red rays of the sun, and who wore among jewels set with spotless gems, other ornaments like the diadem (worn by a king). He decked his tuft with a wreath of campaka, karuviḷai, ved kūṭā-

1 The havis offerings consisted of honey, milk, curds, and ghee.

2 These are evidently pāṭaśālas, the institutions in modern times, for teaching the Vēdas.

3 The fire-stick is a twig of the sacred fig tree, called samit in Sanskrit literature.

4 The three fires are the gārhapatya, āhavanīya and dakṣiṇāgni, worshipped by Agnihōtrins, a practice that continues today in Tamil districts.

5 The outfit of the Kṣatriya-būtam. Lines 37-50 also are interpolations giving a description more or less as is found in the lines following. To wear a tuft was the accepted custom of the day for all communities.

lam and cool and sweet water-plants, jāti and other flowers. He wore garlands strung with choice flowers and other ornamentations. He had rings on all ten fingers of his hands,¹ and his broad breast was of kumkumam colour. He wore around his waist a soft brilliant-red silk, and he consumed the hot preparation of cāli rice brought to him in a gold vessel, besides other agreeable sweetmeats]. His body had the sparkling brilliance of coral, and he ruled the sea-girt world, holding in his hands the muracu, white umbrella, feather-fan, tall flag,² the famous ankusa, a steel spear and a binding rope of steel. He drove away countless kings of great fame, and capturing the whole earth,³ he ruled righteously, punishing evil-doers, and protected the world like Neṭiyōn himself with great and growing fame.

Then came the great deity of the illustrious Vaiśya-būtam⁴ with his body the lustrous colour of pure gold, wearing every ornament except the diadem worn by cele-

1 The term añjumakaṇ is vague but has been interpreted as meaning 'one having rings on all five fingers.' No light is forthcoming from the commentary. The line may be interpreted as 'he who wore rings on his fingers emitting rays of light' (añcu).

2 The chief characteristics (lakṣaṇa) and deeds of the Pāṇṭyan have been attributed to the Kṣatriya-būtam.

3 Reference here is perhaps to Kṛṣṇa helping the Pāṇṭava Arjuna against his enemy Duryōdhana. The Arumpatavurai interprets ālvōṇ as Arjuna in l. 52 and maṇṇar as Duryōdhana and others in l. 56.

4 The outfit of the Vaiśya-būtam is furnished. The plough-share and the balance are the symbols of the duties of Vaiśyas and represent the bhūvaiśyaṇ and dhanavaiśyaṇ into which the whole community was divided. The Vaiśyas could give gifts and receive gifts in their turn. Lines 67-4 also are interpolations and repeat more or less the same description of the būtam.

brated monarchs of the strong spear, catering for the vast world as befits a member of the merchant community and bearing in his hands the ploughshare and the balance. [His cloth was of the much praised golden colour. In his tuft was a wreath linked together with flowers of veṭci, tāḷai, honey-laden āmpal, sēṭal, neytal, pūḷai and marutam. On his lightning-like breast was sandal paste of a brilliant colour shining like burnished gold. He would give and accept food well mixed with gram, peas, dhal, black gram, and several other green grains. It was he who enjoyed his meal before noon with water in his hand and frequented granaries where paddy was stored, fields full of birds, merchants' shops and shady kāñci trees.

Holding the plough, the weighing balance needed in bazaars, the *tāl*¹ of enveloping brilliance. and the yāl, he would favour (people) with abundance of produce and entertain guests. He would also sell to those who needed them rare articles brought from mountains and seas.]² He assumed the form of a chieftain pursuing the harmless-agricultural life³ and resembled Śiva wearing a young crescent in his resplendent coiffure.

There also appeared the chief of the (Vēḷāla) Vēḷāṇ-būtams,⁴ who received sacrificial offerings in noisy Madura, (who was the colour of the karuviḷai flower with decorative

1 Tāl is another vague term and has been taken to mean 'lampstand'.

2 This shows that the Vaiśyas had sea-borne trade as well as caravantrade.

3 The Vaiśya chief was the lord of the agricultural tracts. He is likened to Śiva.

4 The outfit of the Vēḷāṇ-būtam. Lines 89-96 are interpolations being a repetition of the būtam's description.

ornaments of gold and silver, who wore lustrous kaḷakam, whose broad breast was painted with the dried paste of fragrant akil, who wore in his tuft a wreath of flowers grown on the branches of trees, creepers, water-plants and others, who held a plough¹ made by expert black-smiths, and who had attained praiseworthy prestige), whose body was like a cleaned sapphire, who had a dress made of the bright kaḷakam, and who had the technique needed for dancing and was versed in the different modes of singing.²

(These four pūtams) said : 'Since we know beforehand that this city is to be consumed by fire on the day on which the king's justice fails, and since we know that this is just, it is proper that we should go away from here.' All these four guardian deities deserted their respective quarters even before the heroic woman plucked off her breast.

Then the street of grain-dealers, the car street decorated with festoons, and the four streets occupied respectively by men of the four castes, began to be agitated as on the day when the *Kāṇṭāvaṇam*³ blazed forth [set on fire by the reliant (Arjuna) of the powerful monkey-standard].⁴

1 The plough was common to the Vēḷāḷa and the Valśya. The latter had the balance as well.

2 It transpires that the Vēḷāḷas had their own rural amusements of singing and dancing so as to relieve the monotony of their agricultural occupation.

3 The reference is to the burning of the Kāṇṭāvaṇam. For a description of it, see the Mahābhārata.

4 This flag signified the leadership of Arjuna. It may be noted that l. 111 is not found in certain manuscripts.

The flames did not go near the residences of the righteous though they blazed among the dwellings of the unrighteous. Unaffected by the fire, cows and calves reached the broad streets of the pious cowherds.¹ Strong and fierce male elephants and herds of female elephants and fleet steeds ran away outside the city walls.

(In that city) there were women² lying unconscious in their soft, smooth widespread beds under the spell of love and wine in the company of their husbands. Their beautiful young breasts were painted with unguents, their eyes were darkened with collyrium and their hair was adorned with wreaths of fragrant, honey-laden, gaping buds filling the air with perfume. From these alighted pollen on to their breasts painted with kumkumam and decorated with pearl necklaces.

Other women, with yellow spotted alkuls and fragrant tresses, whose lisping children with rosy mouths and toddling gait came in the company of grey-haired women, awoke from sleep on cotton mattresses.

The matrons who unfailingly attended to household duties and entertained guests, rejoiced greatly. They worshipped and praised the fire-god, whose flames rose high, saying: 'Losing her husband, whose chest shone with a beautiful garland, this lady won her victory with her

1 Followers of dharma as well as the animal kingdom were left untouched by fire. Similarly chaste women and innocent children were spared. It was by no means a slaughter of innocents.

2 Two kinds of household women are distinguished. The women described in ll. 119-27 are those who have not yet given birth to children. The women described in ll. 128-32 are those who have children. Besides these there were old women, as the reference to grey hairs indicates.

anklet. Is this war waged by her breast unjust?¹ Not so.'

In the far-famed street of the songstresses,² trained in the sixty-four arts,³ where could be heard the reverberations of the mirudangam, the sweet subdued flute, and the vibration of the singing yāl produced by variations in tone, the dancing-girls who lost their theatre, burst out: 'Where does this woman come from? Whose daughter is she? Wonder it is that one single woman who had lost her husband, could vanquish the inconsiderate king with her anklet, and finally set fire to this city'.

Seeing the great city had lost its evening festivals,⁴ the chanting of the Vēdas (āraṇam), the kindling of sacrificial fires, the worship of gods, the lighting of domestic lamps, the healthful repose of nightfall, and the resounding notes of the muracam, and because it was unable to bear the thrust of the blazing flame, the goddess Maturāpati appeared before the sorely oppressed heroic wife, who, pained at heart by the decease of her beloved husband, heaved a deep sigh (which shook her frame), and roamed aimlessly through the streets and lanes⁵ in a state of agitation, partly struggling hard to walk and partly bewildered and unconscious.

1 Here is a justification by the chaste women of Madura of the action of Kaṇṇaki and of her curse. It is said that they prostrated themselves before the blazing fire as an act of religious duty.

2 Here is a reference to the public theatre of the city which was consumed by the conflagration.

3 See above, p. 206, n. 3.

4 Śibali offered usually at evening. Other features were Vēdic chanting and prayers to sacrificial fires and at temples.

5 The term used for lanes is kavalai.

VENPĀ

The goddess known as Maturāpati¹ came before her who had wrung off her fierce young breast, and whose victory² equalled that of the Goddess of Wealth,³ the Goddess of Learning,⁴ and the great Goddess⁵ who killed and stood upon the demon Makiṣāsura.

1 Maturāpati was the family-deity of the Pāṇṭyan king. Every reigning Hindu king, ancient or modern, has his own kula-dēvatā. In the Rāghuvamśā Kālidāsa says that after Rāma's death the family-deity of Ayōdhyā appeared at midnight to Kuṣa, son and successor. Today Padmanābhasvāmī is the family deity of Travancore kings, and Cāmuṇḍī of Mysore Rajas.

2 Kaṇṇaki's signal victory over the Madura king was tantamount to all the victories of the three goddesses put together.

3 Lakṣhmī.

4 Sarasvatī.

5 Umā in the form of Makiṣāsuramardanī.

CANTO XXIII

KATTURAI KATAI

OR

THE EXPLANATION

WITH her head decorated with a crescent and her matted locks, kuvaḷai-like eyes, white radiant face, coral-mouth revealing her teeth, with the left half of her body dark blue, and the right half golden, with a golden lotus in her left hand, and a glittering and terrifying sword in her right, with a victorious kaḷal on her right leg, and a matchless jingling anklet on her left, Maturāpati,¹ the family deity of the chief—who ruled the cool harbour of Korḱai² and Kumari port, whose northern limit was the golden Himalayas³ and who was lord of Potiyil—unwilling to 1 A description of the form of the presiding deity of the city of Madura. This is in agreement with the idea in Sanskrit legends that every great capital of ancient times had its own guardian deity who was in charge of the city. We hear in the Rāmāyaṇa of the presiding deity of Lankā, appearing before Hanumān, the monkey ambassador of Sugrīva.

2 Korḱai and Kumari were the ports of the Pāṇṭyas. Here the poet refers to the Pāṇṭyan as chief of the maeltime tracts while in the next line he describes him as chief of the hill tribes. This is one way of extolling his name and fame.

3 This does not necessarily mean that the Pāṇṭyan kingdom extended on the north as far as the Himalayas. It demonstrates however that the prowess of Pāṇṭyan arms had been felt by the ruling princes of northern India whose northern limit was the Himalayas. This is in keeping with the statement of Āriyappaṭai-kaṭanda Neṭuñceliyan occurring in the kaṭṭurai towards the end of 'Maturaikkāṇṭam'. A short poem is ascribed to him (Puṇam., t. 183).

face the graceful but sorrow-stricken woman, the heroic wife who, highly perturbed, had plucked out one of her breasts, went behind her¹ and said: 'Blessed lady! Canst thou listen to my complaint? Whereupon, the woman with the grief-stricken face, turned to her right and asked: 'Who art thou following me from behind? Art thou aware of my deep pain?'

Maturāpatī replied: 'Yes, I am aware of thy great suffering, O faultless lady! I am the tutelary deity of the vast city of Kūṭal. I wish to speak a word. I am much concerned at the fate of thy husband. Lady of golden bracelets, listen. O listen to a word of mine, noble lady! Wilt thou not pay heed, O friend, to the lamentable disease causing anguish to my mind? Hear, my dear, the fruits of our kings' deeds in their previous births.² Listen also to the account of your husband's past deeds resulting in this present misery.

'My ears have heard only the sound of Vēdic chanting³ but have never heard the sound of the bell (clamouring for justice).⁴ Except for the slander of kings who pay their

1 The poet graphically describes how the Goddess of Madura approached the Lady of Chastity, giving us the impression that she thought herself inferior to Kāṇṇakī. She therefore appeared from behind and made an appeal to her to give a patient hearing to her words.

2 The theory of belief in past karmā is once again stressed.

3 The deafening chanting of the Vēdic Brahmanas in every corner of the city. Cf. Maturāikkāṇṇi, 1. 656.

4 The bell of justice, also called āraicclimaṇi. Tradition affirms that every palace had such a bell in front of it, for the use of people and even animals whenever injustice was done to them by the State, so as to bring it to the king's notice. The Goddess of Madura says that she had never heard the sound of that bell, implying that there had never been a breach of justice in the State tributes by prostrating themselves before our monarch, his sceptre has never incurred the displeasure of his subjects.¹ Moreover though fair-faced girls cast shy looks towards him forcing the passion of his powerful heart beyond the control of his intellect², as the young elephant runs wild uncontrolled by a trained rider, yet this is no stain to kings born in this noble family associated with high morals.

‘Hast thou not heard that a Pāṇṭyan king, whose hand had broken the golden crown and the glittering bracelets of the king of gods wielding the thunderbolt, knocked one day at the door-less house³ of Kīrandai, whose life was valueless (to others), and overheard his (Kīrandai’s) wife telling her husband : “You departed for a distant place, and left me in this maṇṭram saying that no fence was stronger than the protection of our monarch. Has that fence ceased to protect us today?” Instantly the king closed his ears, as if pierced by a red-hot smoking nail. He quaked with fear as his heart burnt within him, and he cut off his hand⁴ in order to maintain a righteous sceptre to her knowledge, and that this was the first time that injustice had been done.

1 Protection of his subjects is the supreme duty of the king. This is also the prescription of all nīti treatises in Sanskrit. (See also Puram., st. 72. Cf. l. 34 with ll. 76-7 of ‘Valakkuraikātai’, canto xx).

2 The weakness of the Pāṇṭyan who lacked control over his senses is brought out, but this was never attended by injustice of any sort.

3 This statement agrees with that noted by Megasthenes in his Indika that there were no thieves in the land and that the people slept with their doors open.

4 Cf. Sīla., patikam; also Paḷamoli, st. 102. The commentators on the Tolkāppiyam refer to this incident.

without any slur. There is, therefore, no blot on those born in this royal family. Hear, again, the truth of the matter.

‘When a king of this dynasty, a wielder of the polished spear, who had richly fed (the combatants in the Mahābhārata war) had secured peace, he held a great durbar.¹ An able Brahmana, Parāśara, who belonged to the good and fertile kingdom of the Lord of highly reputed Pukār wielding a righteous sceptre and a triumphant sword—one of whose kings weighed (his flesh) to save a dove,² and another awarded justice to a cow³—and who had heard of the peerless munificence of the Cēra of the curved lance, by offering the heavens⁴ to a Tamil Brahmana poet, said to himself: “I shall see this Cēra of great valour and long lance.” He then passed through jungles and country

1 This may also refer to an assembly of State when there was an army review including a feast in honour of the army. This practice is evident from the Kalīṅkattupparaṇi, and the technical term for this is nālōlakkam and here it is termed perunālirukkai. Hence it may be a reference to the Pāṇṭyan king. There are others who find here a reference to a certain Cēra king Utiyaṅcēral (see below, ‘Ucalvari’, st. 29; also Puram., st. 2, Akam., st. 233). Several references go to strengthen the tradition that a Cēra took an active part in the Mahābhārata war.

2 This reference is to Cibi; see above, p. 248, n. 4.

3 This reference is to Manunitikaṇṭa Cōlan; see above, p. 249, n. 1.

4 Pālalkautamanār. Cf. Patirru, Third Ten, colophon. The Cēra is Palyānaicelkelukuṭṭuvan, younger brother of Imayavarampan. The legend goes that Kautamanār, a Brahmana and a Tamil poet, performed ten sacrifices (yajñas) and in the course of the tenth, the Brahmana and his lady disappeared by going to heaven. In its accomplishment Kelukuṭṭuvan helped him (see below, canto xxviii, ll. 137-8; also Akam., st. 233).

The elderly man was exceedingly pleased with young Dakkiṇaṇ and presented him with a sacred thread of pearls and bright jewels, as well as with bangles and earrings before he departed for his native place.

‘But the sentinels (of the locality) jealous of Vārttikaṇ because his child had been beautified and decorated with fine ornaments, accused him saying : “This Brahmana has misappropriated treasure-trove¹ which belongs legitimately to the king.” They then threw him into prison. Kārttikai, the wife of Vārttikaṇ, grew frantic. She wept in grief. She threw herself on to the ground rolling and fulminating. Seeing this, the goddess Durgā of untarnished glory refused to open the door of her temple for the conduct of daily worship. When the king of the mighty spear heard that the massive door remained shut and would not open, he was confounded, and inquired : “Has any injustice been done?² Come and tell me if you have heard of any failure in the discharge of our duties to the Goddess of Victory”. Then his young messengers made obeisance to the protecting king and informed him of the case of Vārttikaṇ. “This is not fair”, burst forth the king in anger and addressed Vārttikaṇ : “It is your duty to forgive me. My righteous rule still has life, though, owing to the ignorance of my men, it has deviated from the ordained path.” The king granted³ him Taṅkāḷ with its paddy fields watered by tanks, and Vayalūr of im-

1 All treasure-trove went of right to the king and misappropriation was severely punished.

2 This shows the religious mind of the king and his fear of the obloquy of wielding an unrighteous sceptre.

3 Both Taṅkāḷ and the adjoining village of Vayalūr were granted as a brahmadēya village by the king in order to appease the wrath of the Brahmana and his lady.

with green leaves, the tired man stayed awhile with his staff,¹ water-bowl, white umbrella, fire-stick, a small bundle of articles and slippers, and said: "Long live the victor whose protecting white umbrella assures his certain success. Long live the protector who uprooted the *kaṭampu*² from the sea! Long live the king who engraved his bow on the Himalayas! Long live the *Poraiyan*³, possessor of the beautiful and cool Porunai! Long live King Māntaraṇ-Cēral!"⁴

Surrounded by a group of playful youths, some with curly hair and some with tufts and some with lisping mouths and coral lips, toddling some distance from their homes, he addressed them: "Young Brahmana boys, if you can recite the Vēda after me, you may go away taking this little bundle of jewels."⁵ Then the son of the famous Brahmana Vārttikaṇ, by name Ālamarcelvaṇ (Dakṣiṇāmūrti) whose rose lips still retained the fragrance of his mother's milk, in the presence of his playmates, with prattling tongue and great inward pleasure, recited the Vēda, faultlessly observing the correct rhythm.

1 The impedimenta of an orthodox Brahmana. Kuṇḍikai may answer to what we call jāri still used by orthodox Brahmanas. Kāṭṭam (kāṣṭha) are twigs of the sacred pipal used for havis in the fire.

2 See below, canto xxviii, ll. 135-6.

3 Poraiyaṇ was a title of the Cēra kings.

4 Perhaps another name of Palyāṇaicelkelukuṭṭuvaṇ. He was a contemporary ruler and chief of Kuṭṭanāṭu while Cēṇkuṭṭuvaṇ was reigning in Vaṇci.

5 The Brahmana's love for the Vēda and his magnanimity in giving away valuable jewels to a child reciting it according to established practice show how unselfish were the learned Brahmanas of those golden days.

great fire would envelop renowned Madura to the ruin of its king. (That has come to pass now).

‘Hear again, O lady of glittering bangles! The kings of mighty spears, Vasu and Kumara, who ruled in an exemplary manner with their armies, over the good kingdom of Kalinga encircled by a thick grove, at Singapuram¹ with its fair and fertile fields, and at Kapilapuram with its bamboo forests, became enemies, being agnates, though born in an ancient family of undying prosperity. And to a distance of six *Kāvadams*² all round, owing to their war, none could penetrate that region. Then a merchant, Śangaman by name, ambitious to increase his wealth, came with his wife, like people escaping unnoticed, bearing a great bundle on his head and began to dispose of his valuable wares in a bazaar of Singapuram of undiminished glory.

‘O lady of gold bangles! Your husband, Kōvalan, in his previous birth was called Barata,³ and being in the service of this valorous monarch, had in disgust given up the vow (of non-killing)⁴. He mistook (Śangaman) for a spy,⁵ captured him, brought him to the presence of the king of the conquering spear and beheaded him. Nīli, the wife of the murdered Śangaman, finding that she had

1 Simhapuram and Kapilapuram were cities of the ancient kingdom of Kalinga. Vasu and Kumara, agnates, ruled over them. See Intro., p. 34.

2 The battlefield extended to a distance of six kātams all round.

3 Sans., Bharata.

4 Akimsā or non-injury to any living creature.

5 This shows that the spy system was widely prevalent. For a study of this institution see the Kauṭaliya Arthaśāstra.

measurable yield, and prostrated himself¹ on the ground before Vārttikan the husband of Kārttikai, and in part appeased the unappeasable wrath of the latter.

‘Then the door (of the shrine) of the Goddess who rode upon the stag, opened so loudly as to be heard throughout the long and broad streets of mountain-like mansions of that ancient city.

‘At that time, the triumphant king issued the following proclamation by beating a drum placed upon the back of an elephant which was sent throughout the city :² “Release all prisoners from the prison. Remit all taxes from those who owe them. Let all who find unclaimed things and discover treasure-trove enjoy them.”

‘Listen how even such a king committed this act of injustice. There was a prediction that, in the month of Āṭi, on the tithi of Aṣṭamī, in the dark fortnight, on a Friday,³ with Kārttikai and Paraṇi (in the ascendent),⁴ a

1 Literally: ‘showed his chest to the damsel of this vast world.’ The commentator says that so far the king had not prostrated himself and hence the earth was raging with heat. But, now, that heat subsided a little. However the term avaḷ may refer to Kārttikai and may mean her rage (which at the miscarriage of justice to her husband would not fully subside) subsided a little.

2 A general amnesty and remission of taxes; even treasure-trove became the property of the finder. The state relinquished its rights voluntarily. What affected a certain individual became a general law. Cf. Kuraḷveṇpā, 172.

3 The mention of the weekday (Friday) has made some scholars draw the conclusion that the epic Cilappatikāram must be a later composition on the ground that weekdays were unknown to India until the fourth century A.D. But this is arguing from one unknown to another unknown.

4 Alalserkuṭṭam is Kārttikai and Paraṇi (see Puṇam., st. 229).

great fire would envelop renowned Madura to the ruin of its king. (That has come to pass now).

‘Hear again, O lady of glittering bangles! The kings of mighty spears, Vasu and Kumara, who ruled in an exemplary manner with their armies, over the good kingdom of Kalinga encircled by a thick grove, at Singapuram¹ with its fair and fertile fields, and at Kapilapuram with its bamboo forests, became enemies, being agnates, though born in an ancient family of undying prosperity. And to a distance of six *Kāvadams*² all round, owing to their war, none could penetrate that region. Then a merchant, Śangaman by name, ambitious to increase his wealth, came with his wife, like people escaping unnoticed, bearing a great bundle on his head and began to dispose of his valuable wares in a bazaar of Singapuram of undiminished glory.

‘O lady of gold bangles! Your husband, Kōvalan, in his previous birth was called Barata,³ and being in the service of this valorous monarch, had in disgust given up the vow (of non-killing)⁴. He mistook (Śangaman) for a spy,⁵ captured him, brought him to the presence of the king of the conquering spear and beheaded him. Nīli, the wife of the murdered Śangaman, finding that she had

1 Simhapuram and Kapilapuram were cities of the ancient kingdom of Kalinga. Vasu and Kumara, agnates, ruled over them. See Intro., p. 34.

2 The battlefield extended to a distance of six kātams all round.

3 Sans., Bharata.

4 Akimsā or non-injury to any living creature.

5 This shows that the spy system was widely prevalent. For a study of this institution see the Kauṭaliya Arthaśāstra.

no resting-place, wandered about the streets and court-yards, and created a commotion proclaiming: "O king, is this your justice? O Vaiśyas, is this justice? O commoners, is this justice? O residents of this place, is this right?" She raved thus for fourteen days, and exhilarated by the thought that that was a sacred day she ascended a cliff in order to rejoin her murdered husband in heaven, and fell down cursing¹ thus:

"He who has inflicted this injury upon us shall be overtaken by the same fate."

'That unerring curse has now descended upon thee.'²

'This is my explanation. Please listen. When actions in a past birth by those devoid of goodness yield their results, no (amount of) penance can stop them. O lady of abundant tresses of hair, after fourteen days³ thou shalt see thy wedded lover in the form of a celestial being, but never more in his earthly form.' When she had finished explaining these things in the proper manner to the lady of chastity, the Goddess of Madura liberated the city from the conflagration.

Kaṇṇaki then said: 'I will not sit nor shall I stand till I see the husband of my heart'; and she broke her gold bangles at the temple of Korravai,⁴ and once again cried:

1 Nili's curse and its effect upon Kōvalan in this birth. See Maṇi., 'Vaṇcimānakarpukkakātai,' ll. 5-34, for this curse.

2 No amount of dharma in the present birth can stop the laws of preordained fate. The actions of a previous birth yield their fruit in the next birth and, according to one theory, for several continued births if they be of a heinous nature.

3 See Cila., patikam, ll. 50-3.

4 Breaking the bangles was a custom in vogue in ancient times. Immediately after her husband's death, the wife broke

'I entered this city with my husband by the eastern gate. Alas! I am now going out alone through the western gate.' Unconscious of day or night, she went helpless along one side of the flooded Vaikai. Dejected and sad, little thinking whether she was descending into a pit or ascending a cliff, she climbed step by step up the hill sacred to Neṭuvai¹, the bearer of the long fiery lance, which tore out the bowels of the sea,² cut out the heart of the mountain,³ and vanquished Asuras: and there, under the shade of a flowery vēnkai grove, she pined saying: 'Alas, I am a great sinner.'

When fourteen days had thus passed, the king of gods,⁴ who with celestials regarded that day as fit for worship, praised the great name of this famous woman, showered unfading flowers upon her and revered her. In a divine chariot at the side of Kōvalaṇ, murdered in the her bangles, this being the first sign of her widowhood. Kaṇṇaki did this before the Durgā temple. It is interesting that this custom still prevails among certain communities in Southern India.

1 Arumpatavuraiāciriyaṛ identifies this with Tiruccenṅkōṭu, which is not probable. Personal inquiry about any local tradition of a Kaṇṇaki temple there proved fruitless. This hill must therefore be one which was at a distance of fourteen days' walk from Madura to the west. To venture a conjecture it may be the Palni range containing a sacred shrine of Subrahmaṇya.

2 A reference to the vanquishing by the war-god of the Asura hiding in the sea. This tradition still exists in association with the Subrahmaṇya shrine at Tirruccendur in Tinnevely district. The story runs that after vanquishing the Asura, Subrahmaṇya departed for Tirupparankunṇam in Madura district where he married Dēvayāni, the daughter of Indra.

3 This refers to the piercing of the Krauñca hill.

4 It is said that Indra in person took her to Heaven—a rare honour reserved only for women of chastity.

king's city, Kaṇṇaki with the forest-like hair went up to heaven.

VENPĀ

Because it is a fact that gods will worship her who worships not God but worships her husband,¹ Kaṇṇaki, that jewel among the women of the earth, became a goddess and the guest of the ladies of heaven.

EPILOGUE

Thus ends the Maturaikkāṇṭam which describes the virtues, victories, and heroism of the dynasty of the Pāṇṭyas, who held the distinguished spear in their hands among the dynasties of the three crowned monarchs. It also describes the great glory attached to their ancient and famous capital, the richness of their festivals, the approach of the gods to the city, the unfailling happiness of the village communities, the abundance of their rich foodstuffs, the fertility yielded by the great Vaikai river, the never-failing fresh showers supplied by the rain-bearing clouds, the two viruttis called *ārapaṭi*² and sāttuvati,³ and the songs and dances in which these were exhibited. These and many other things, illustrative of the unmatched rule of righteousness of the Pāṇṭyan Naṭuñceliyan⁴, who van-

1 Cf. Kuraivenpā, 55.

2 Ārapaṭi (Ārabhaṭi)—‘a kind of drama having for its topic the acquisition of wealth and centering round the achievements of great warriors as heroes, one of the four nāṭakaviruttis’ (Tamil Lexicon, p. 242). See also Cila., canto iii, l. 13, comment.

3 Sāttuvadi (sātvati)—‘a variety of dramatic composition which has a semi-divine being for hero and treats of virtue, one of the four nāṭakaviruttis’ (ibid., p. 1362).

4 This Pāṇṭyan king who was a contemporary of Ceraṇ Senkuṭṭuvan is called Aralsu-kaṭṭiliruñciya Pāṇṭya-Neṭuñceliyan.

quished the army of the northern Aryas, and established peace in the southern Tamil country, and who again slept eternal sleep seated on the throne with his queen of faultless chastity, are described.

We have other kings whose names were prefixed by Pāṇṭyan Ilavantikaippaḷlituñciya Naṁmāraṇ, Pāṇṭyan Cittiramaṭattuñciya Naṁmāraṇ, etc. The term 'tuñciya' in these contexts means, simply, 'dead'. In order to distinguish the one name from the other it was probably then a tradition to prefix to each king's name the place where he died. It is said that the Sāṁudiraḷ dynasty ruling at Calicut continues this custom of naming themselves. See Purāṇāṁūru, p. 581 n.

III. VANCIK KANTAM

CANTO XXIV

KUNRAK KURAVAI

OR

THE DANCE OF THE HILL-MAIDENS

URAIPPĀṬṬUMATAI

THE hill-maidens spoke thus : 'We came to the hillside to scare away little birds and drive off parrots, to sport in the waterfalls and plunge into springs;¹ and while wandering about with no other concern, we saw a lady and asked her : "O lady, who lookest like Valli, who art thou that standest in the shade of the fragrant mountain tree, vēṅkai, after losing thy breast and breaking our hearts?"' (Kaṇṇaki) coolly replied : "I am she whose cruel destiny it was to lose her husband on that evil day when ever-joyous Madura and its king were fated to be ruined." Hearing this, the hill-maidens were struck with awe and worshipped her with their bangled hands uplifted, and the gods showered flowers like copious rain.'

The maidens continued : 'In our presence and in that of other hillfolk she was taken to Heaven by the gods with her husband. There is no deity like her for our community, O people of small hamlets!² O people of small 1 Here we are introduced to the daily life of the hill-men and women. They were devotees of Murukan, the god of the kuṛiñci region. Valli is the consort of this god.

2 Śṛukuṭi as opposed to Perumkuṭi. This indicates that their residences were simple in character.

hamlets! Let us acclaim this lady as our Goddess, O people of small hamlets! Under the cool shade of the vēṇkai whose odorous flower-buds (grow) on the slopes of the hill with enchanting waterfalls, acclaim this deity, O people of small hamlets! Play upon the tonṭakam,¹ beat the little drum, blow the horn, and ring the noisy bell, sing the kuṟiñci,² offer spicy incense, perform the sacrifice of flowers, and erect the surrounding wall with its door, hymn songs of praise and scatter flowers—all in honour of this lady who has lost one of her breasts—so that the great hill may, without diminution, flourish in plenty.’³

KOLUCCOL

Then began the song. (The maid said to the lady):⁴

‘Dear girl of beautiful ornaments! You will not see anything there, (come and) see what is here. The mountain-stream comes bubbling along, as beautiful as Indra’s bow, mixed with the black powder of añjana, the yellow powder of aritāra and the red powder of sintura (vermi-

1 A kind of musical instrument now gone out of use. This and the mention of similar instruments like the drum, the horn and the bell show that music formed an essential part of prayer.

2 A song appropriate to the hilly region. It may be noted that the ancient Tamils developed peculiar modes of music according to the geographical environment of the whole Tamil land. There was pālai music, neytal music, marutam music, and so on.

3 Kāṇṇaki was first adopted as a deity by the hill-maidens, and then by the important kings of South India. A shrine was built for her.

4 The words of the maid to the heroine. When the hill-maidens began bathing in the waterfalls, their thoughts turned towards their lovers who were at that time separated from them.

lion). We shall go and bathe in it. Let us bathe, friend; let us bathe.

‘Though the lord of the hill who enjoyed us has departed from us, saying “Give up your fears”, shall we bathe in the stream that comes from the hill surrounded by a misty grove? We find no reason, do we, to be displeased at the fresh floods which come after embracing the rocks of his mountain?¹ O, it is only with the fresh stream which comes after embracing the hillock that we shall play: with whom else should we play, dear friend?

‘We can see no single reason to vex our hearts at the new floods which come after sporting with the gold of the hill, do we? O, it is only with the fresh floods that come after sporting with the gold of (our lord’s) hill we shall frolic: with whom else should we frolic, dear friend?

‘We do not see anything that should vex our hearts, do we?—at this new stream which brings the flower-buds of his mountain? O, it is only with this new stream which brings his mountain flower-buds that we shall play. With whom else should we play, O my friend?’

PATTUMATAI

‘O girl of sweet words! We have been sporting, diving deep into pure water till our collyrium-eyes became red, praying to (Subrahmanya)² the wielder of the strong

1 The lord of the mountain is the hero. The poet hints that the stream (a lady) embraces this mountain of which their hero is the lord. But the maiden says that they need not be jealous of this action on the part of the stream.

2 After bathing to the accompaniment of singing and dancing, these girls prayed to their god Murukan that they might be married.

deadly spear, and engaging ourselves in kuravai (dance).
Come along, friend, let us sing.

‘O! This is indeed the spear wielded by the deity who never deserts the highly renowned Centil,¹ Ceṅkōṭu,² the white hill (Veṅkunram)³ and Ērakam⁴—the white, shining, leaf-shaped spear, which put an end to (the Asura) Śūra (in the form of a) mango-tree,⁵ in olden days, by chasing him into the sea surrounding the earth.

‘O! This is indeed the spear held aloft by the matchless deity with six faces⁶ and twelve arms; this is the shining spear wherewith (the God) riding the peacock (piṇimukam)⁷ and celebrated by the king of the celestials,

1 The identification of Centil with Svāmimalai, by the annotator, seems to be wrong in the light of Ērakam being called Svāmimalai by Aruṇakīrī-svāmigaḷ. Naccinārkkīṇiyar in his commentary (‘Muruku’, st. 189) perhaps followed the Arumpatavurai. Centil is Tiruccentūr, the famous Subrahmaṇya shrine in Tirunelveli district.

2 Seven miles from Sankaridroog railway station, and twenty-two miles from Nāmakkal, Salem District. The place is also noted for an Ardhanārīśvara temple containing a shrine of Viṣṇu in the same compound. (See Dikshitar, The Matsya Purāṇa, p. 71).

3 The identification of this shrine is not yet established.

4 Ērakam is Svāmimalai, seven miles from Kumbakonam railway station in Thanjavoor District, situated on the northern bank of the Kāvēri. The god enshrined goes by the name of Svāminātha.

5 The present village of Maṇappāṭu, about eight miles from Tiruccentūr, is supposed to be another form of the original name Māpāṭu, and is connected by tradition with the Asura Śūra.

6 Ṣaṇmukham of Sanskrit literature.

7 Piṇimukam may also refer to an elephant (see Paripāṭal, st. 5). The reference is to a dēvāsura-yuddha ending in the victory of Indra, the king of Heaven.

vanquished the Asura enemies and destroyed their greatness.

‘O! This is indeed the spear decorating the lovely hands of him who was suckled by six mothers in the lotus-bed of the Śaravaṇaī pool (Śaravaṇappūmpaḷḷi);¹ this is the long spear that destroyed the Krauñca mountain, after cleaving the breast of the Asura who had that hill for his residence.’²

PĀṬṬUMATAI³

‘O good girl with bracelets! I am moved to laughter. To cure me of the (love) sickness caused by the owner of the cool hill on which pepper grows,⁴ my mother who is not aware of the idle talk in the village (alar) thinks that (the spirit of) Kaṭampan⁵ (Murukan) has manifested itself in me, and has sent for the Vēlan’s⁶ (exorcist) veriyāṭal,⁷ intending to abjure it.

‘O good girl with the lovely bangles! This again provokes my laughter! If the exorcist who is appointed to deliver me from love-sickness caused by the lord of 1 Cf. Tirumurugārru, ll. 253-5. This is a favourite legend found in every Mahāpurāṇa, dealing with the birth of this war-god.

2 Cf. Maṇi., canto v, l. 13.

3 These also are the words of the heroine to her maid, evidently after prayer to their favourite deity.

4 The chief produce of the hill consisted of cane and pepper.

5 One of the Tamil names for Subrahmanya.

6 Another Tamil name of the same deity.

7 It is a kind of dance performed to cure a man possessed of an evil spirit. The Vēlan invokes the aid of Subrahmanya and is possessed by the God’s spirit and thus exorcises the bad spirit out of the victim.

these mountains, comes, that exorcist is a fool. If Murukan will manifest Himself then He will be a greater fool, even though He destroyed the Krauñca mountain.

‘O good girl with the serrated bracelets! This also provokes laughter in me. If the exorcist appointed to remove the love-sickness caused by the chieftain of the hill of exceeding fragrance, comes, that exorcist is a fool, If the son of Śiva, seated under the banyan tree¹ manifests Himself then He will be a greater fool.

‘O good girl with the choice ornaments! This further provokes my laughter. To expel my severe sickness caused by the embrace of the lord of this mountain, if the exorcist comes, he is a fool indeed. And if my deity who wears the garland of kaṭappam,² and the wintry blossoms, manifests Himself, He is much more a fool than the exorcist appointed to drive away my sickness.’

PĀṬṬUMATAI³

(The maid replied) :

‘The son of the god seated under the banyan tree (Śiva) will come (riding) his peacock with his consort to the courtyard where the appointed exorcist will perform the veriyāṭal.⁴ When he comes, we shall ask his blessing on our marriage with the lord of this great mountain.⁵

1 Cf. Kalittokai, st. 81-3, Mañi., canto iii, l. 144. The Dakṣiṇāmūrti form of Śiva is alluded to.

2 This flower blossoms during the rainy season.

3 Now follows the reply of the maid to the heroine. Invariably we notice the plural form used by the maid in all love-themes in Tamil literature. The idea underlying this is that the maid identifies herself with the heroine.

4 Cf. Puṇam, st. 22.

5 The reference is to the gāndharva form of marriage.

‘O son of the god of Kailāsa hill!¹ We worship Your feet that look like red asoka flowers, and also the youthful daughter of the mountain folk, who has a crescent-like forehead of the peacock’s hue. We beseech you to give us the hero in (a form of) marriage other than that sanctioned by Brahmā.²

‘We worship your two feet, O son of the daughter of the mountain (Pārvatī)³, with Vaṇṇi of the crescent-forehead, the youthful daughter of the Kuṛavas⁴ dwelling in this our ancient mountain. O great god! Make our hero marry so that it may be known unto many.

‘She is a Kuṛava lady. She is of our community. With her we worship your two feet, you of the six faces! May he, who touched your two holy feet and promised to wed me, be blessed with a good marriage, and be rid of a disapproved union.’⁵

1 Legend has it that the abode of Śiva is Kailāsa, the divine hill, and hence Śiva is known as Kailāsavāsi.

2 The reference here is to the prajāpatya form of marriage, which shows that all the eight forms of marriage prescribed by Hindu law-codes were by this time known to the Tamil land.

3 For the legend see the Matsya Purāṇa. Umā is the daughter of Himavān and Mēnā.

4 The Kuṛavas are a primitive tribe living among hills and mountains from prehistoric times. They still linger in small numbers leading the lives of nomads.

5 Here we see that the hero and heroine had already had a clandestine union of which there was idle talk among the villagers. There was fear on the part of the maid that if her parents came to know of it, she would be taken to task. We seem to read in these stanzas the disadvantages of kaṭaviyal and the benefits of karpiyal. See Nāṭaiyār, st. 86.

PĀṬṬUMATAI

‘When we were singing thus, the lord of our mountain wearing a gorgeous garland, overheard us with sympathy keeping himself hidden.¹ Before he would depart, I went up to him, touched his revered feet with my hands and stood praying to him. Long live you, friend, and listen to what I said (to him).

‘You came to this village wearing a kaṭampa garland and wielding a spear, for the sake of our damsel. But you have neither six faces nor a magnificent peacock; nor have you the Kurava girl (Vaḷḷi). Nor do you possess the Lord’s well-knit shoulders. The people of these small hamlets will not recognize you as the god who is the wearer of the kaṭampa garland. Verily, they are ignorant folk.’

PĀṬṬUMATAI

‘Thus then, having heard what I told him of the idle talk in our village, he became sad at heart, but quietly went away. It is likely that the lord of this mountain country will (soon) marry you.

‘We shall sing an appropriate song in honour of the chaste lady who is worshipped by many, who was shown her husband by groups of several Dēvas and who destroyed the glory of ancient Madura with her breast.

‘We shall sing; come, live you long, friend; we shall sing.

1 What follows is the narration by the maid of what had happened when she was making the above remarks. The maid noticed that the hero was overhearing their conversation, and finding him slip away, she ran to him and requested him to marry the heroine in public. She noticed signs of sympathy on his part and opined that the proposed marriage would soon take place.

‘We shall sing; come, live you long, friend; we shall sing.

‘We shall sing in praise of her who burnt the city of Kūṭal of the tall mansions when its righteous rule vanished. When we sing in praise of her who burnt (Madura), we shall (also) pray for the hand of the lord of these mountains in an honourable wedding.’¹

With sympathy the chaste ladies praise and worship the pretty lady (Kaṇṇaki) in this fertile field of ours. Even after the Dēvas had with extolment restored this pretty lady (Kaṇṇaki) to her husband, they did not cease magnifying her greatness.

‘Praised and worshipped by the Dēvas of the celestial regions, the lady who stood under the sweet-smelling vēṅkai of the forest-she who stood in the shade of the vēṅkai of the forest-attained her abode along with her husband in Heaven from which she will not be sent back. If we sing in praise of her who will not be sent back from Heaven,² this village will also be granted a similar boon.’³

‘O, our village is blessed with a great boon! It is blessed with a great boon. This village which is to witness the marriage of our lady of gold bangles with her husband, is blessed.

1 In anticipation of the early consummation of marriage the maid advised the heroine to worship the new deity, the Lady of Chastity, and be blessed by her, in the belief that Her blessing would not be in vain.

2 She has attained, in philosophical language, nirvāṇa.

3 The implication is that the blessing of the Lady of Chastity would not only benefit a particular individual but the whole community.

'In this way, while we were singing the song of praise for boons received, witnessing our kuravai dance¹ and our *koṇṭunilai*² song, our lover would come to this very place by His blessing and enjoy the drink (of heroes). May he, the chief of the western country (Kuṭaku)³ who carved the bow-emblem on the Himalays and ruled the Kolli⁴ (in the south) live many days in happiness !'

1 This canto shows that kuravai was of different kinds of which at least two are mentioned in the Cilappatikāram. That which was performed by the women of the cowherds was in honour of Viṣṇu, and that by the Hill-maidens in honour of Murukan. We notice differences in their technique.

2 Koṇṭunilai is a kind of ceyyuḷ or song sung apparently to the accompaniment of the kuravai dance. This is evident from the Kalittokai, st. 39, and the commentary thereon.

3 The term kuṭavar-kō is important, and stands for the king of the western region of the Tamil land. It is worth noting that the ancient poets divided the whole Tamil land into three regions—west, east and south. At the head of the eastern region was the Cōḷa, the Kuṇavar-kō, and of the south was the Pāṇṭya, Tennaṇavar-kō (See Paṭiṟru., st. 55 for the use of the term kuṭavar-kō).

4 The Caṅkam classics refer to Kolli in their addresses to the Cēra (see, for example, Puraṇānūru, st. 22; Akaṇānūru, st. 209; Paṭiṟru., st. 73). From this we can deduce that the Kolli-malai formed an important portion of the ancient Cēra kingdom.

CANTO XXV

KATCIK KATAI

OR

THE DECISION TO MARCH NORTH

WHEN the prince of the powerful sword, the son of the Cēra,¹ who to the astonishment of the Dēvas, destroyed the kaṭampu fenced in by the deep sea, and who carved his bow-emblem on the Himalayas, stayed happily in his silver-white palace beside the (artificial) fountain, with his consort Iḷaṅkō-Vēṇmāḷ,² he expressed a desire to go and see the mountain, whose groves were surrounded by clouds, and the music of whose waterfalls resembled an ever-sounding tabor.

Thereupon he left the neighbourhood of Vaṅci accompanied by a large retinue of women spread over an extensive route so that he appeared like Indra of the mighty spear, who desirous of sporting with the divine damsels dwelling in the grove, rich in the wealth of 1 Akam., st. 127, 347. The reference is to Cēralātaṅ. See patikam. Cf. Akam., st. 396. The Cēra line is mythically traced to Heaven.

2 Seṅkuṭṭuvaṅ's queen. It would appear that she belonged to the line of Vēḷir who reigned in later days from Koṭumpālūr in the Pudukottai State. (See Pudukkottai Inscriptions. Also Ep. Rep., No. 315 of 1903, and 1908, pp. 87-9.) Similar names Irukuvēḷ, Iruṅkōvēḷ and Iḷaṅkōvēḷ are found in the inscriptions. The Koṭumpālūr line is a branch of the ancient Vēḷir dynasty that was flourishing in the days of the Caṅkam epoch (see M. Raghava Aiyangar, Cēraṅ-Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṅ, p. 24, and Cēravēntar tāyavalakku, pp. 35-6).

his flowers, mounted his great elephant (Airāvata)¹ and spread his retinue over a distance of one hundred and forty yōjanas, in a region of golden-flowered trees, wide stretching river-banks, islets set in sparkling waters, groves edged with young trees, play-houses and assembly halls.

With his suite he reached the bank spread with fine sand dunes from the Pēriyār river,² which falls from the great mountain and appears like a garland on the breast of Viṣṇu. Its flowing waters were covered with fully blossomed koṅku, vēṅkai, koṇrai in overhanging clusters, as well as with nākam, tilakam, and fragrant āram, around which swarms of bees and beetles were murmuring their sweet songs. Here he stayed at ease.

Everywhere could be heard the songs of the hill-women accompanying the dances proper to each region, the music of the priest³ (Vēlaṇpāṇi) in honour of the victorious God of the red lance, the vallai song sung to the pounding of the grain, the shrill shouting of the guards in the tiṇai-fields, the clamour of the Kuravar as they broke open honey-combs, the heavy drum-beat of waterfalls, the trumpeting of elephants attacking tigers, the loud high-

1 Indra's elephant.

2 This is Ponnāṇi (Sanskrit, Pūrṇavāhinī) which takes its source in the Anaimalai Hills. See Pandit R. Raghava Aiyangar's Vaṅjlmānakar, p. 54.

3 Here are depicted the customs and the habits of the hill people. Their priest was named Vēlaṇ. They trapped elephants and gathered honey. In addition to ordinary watchmen it appears that there were guard-stations, made by erecting huts in the thick branches of lofty trees where men were stationed to raise a hue and cry whenever they anticipated danger from wild animals or their enemies.

pitched voices of the watchmen (sēṇōṇ) in their lofts, the noises of mahouts as they trapped elephants in the kheda, besides the clangour of his promenading army.

Then there appeared before him the hill-folk like vanquished kings,¹ laden with tribute, awaiting his audience in the court at flourshing Vañci, rich in rare articles. They came carrying on their heads such presents² as: the white tusks of elephants, loads of akil, whisks of deer-hair, pots of honey, chips of sandalwood, lumps of red sindura, loads of añjana and beautiful aritāra, cardamom stalks, pepper stalks, kūvainūru (arrowroot flour), luxuriant kavalai, ripe cocounts, delicious mangoes, garlands of green leaves (paccilai), jack-fruits, garlic, sugarcane, flowery creepers, rich bunches of areca-nuts from luxuriant palms, bunches of the big variety of sweet plantains, āḷi cubs, lion cubs, tiger cubs, young rutting elephants, young monkeys, bear cubs, varuṭai deer that roam the hillsides, fawns of the timid deer, fawns of the musk deer, harmless little mongooses, peacocks with beautiful feathers, nāvi kittens (civet cats), wild hens, and parrots with their honeyed words.

They said: 'We have been your slaves for seven generations. Long live your prowess! Under the forest vēṅkai tree a lady with a breast plucked out, suffered unequalled distress; but celebrated by celestials she ascended to Heaven. The celestials praised her. We do not know which is her native place, and whose daughter she is.

1 This demonstrates that there were a number of tributary kings to the Cēra, who was the de facto overlord of the Tamil country. It appears that the tributes were generally paid in kind. Cf. Perumkatai, Bk. I, ch. lviii. ll. 83-99.

2 Here we are furnished with a list of fauna and flora of the mountain.

But we know that she came to your country. May your line last for several hundred years !'

Thereat the great Tamil scholar Śāttan,¹ who had been witnessing with wonder and joy (all that was happening), addressed the king, the delight of the world and the wielder of the long spear, thus : 'Listen, O great and powerful king ! I shall tell you what happened to the lady of lustrous bangles, and to her dear husband, as a result of an ill-fated anklet. I will also tell you how that beautiful women took her anklet and pleaded before the king of powerful troops, and also how the great and ancient city of Madura was razed by the rising flames from the undeveloped breast of that great lady of chastity, who threw her fair anklet before the queen and left her in wrath declaiming thus : "O lady of the five-plaited hair ! Know this : The Pāṇṭyan king, who sat on the lion-throne wearing Lakṣmī in his breast, fainted and died, unable to resolve the perplexity of the lady of flower-wreaths." Without waiting to hear Kaṇṇaki's heroic words in full but not uneasy in mind although unable to support her great sorrow, the noble queen touched his flowery feet and fell dead, saying : "Let me go the way my lord has gone"—as if her soul sought the departed one.

'As if it were her intention to point out to you, and to tell you, O mighty king, the nature of the injustice perpetrated by the powerful Pāṇṭyan, (Kaṇṇaki) came to your kingdom, not (wishing) to return alone to her own native place. O king, may your rule of great fame prosper from aeon to aeon!'¹

1 Cittalai Cāttanār, the author of the epic Maṇimēkalai. Here is unquestionable internal evidence that Śāttanār and Iṅgō-Aṭikaḷ were contemporaries, and that both the Maṇimēkalai and the Cilappatikāram are not romances but are historical documents portraying contemporary political and social life in the Tamil land. Cāttan was an eye-witness to what happened in Madura.

When he heard of the cruel deed of the king of the Pāṇṭyan country, the Cēra, the king of kings, was anguished and said: 'Before these words, which well deserve condemnation from any monarch of our status, reached our ears, it is good that the Pāṇṭyan laid down his life. For it is the departing soul of the king that has straightened the righteous sceptre,² which was bent by this irresistible act of destiny.

'If rains fail, great havoc is caused (to the country). If living beings suffer unrighteousness, widespread fear is caused. Paying due regard to the welfare of his subjects, and wary of tyrannical rule, a protecting king³ born of a noble line occupies a position which is but suffering and is not to be sought after.'

The king spoke thus gracefully to the learned poet who had graphically narrated the tale of woe, and said to his queen: 'One chaste lady lost her life in peace when her husband died.' The other in wrath came to our kingdom. Of these two, O fascinating lady, speak, who is better ?'

1 Cf. Maduraikkāṇṭi, 1. 194.

2 In simple words: hitherto the sceptre had been straight-but an unjust act made it bend. The king's voluntary death, however, removed the stigma attached to it and made it once more a righteous sceptre.

3 The responsibilities of a king are emphasized here by the author. These lines follow the Sanskrit law-codes where the king is ordained to discharge his duties without any regard to rights. The ancient kings did their duty first and then claimed their right. Even an autocratic ruler like Rāvaṇa followed svadharma. (Rāmāyaṇa, 'Yud', ch. lxiii.)

When the monarch said this, the great queen replied :¹ 'Let the (Pāṇṭyan) queen whose soul departed before she experienced the agony of surviving her husband, enjoy the great bliss of Heaven ! And let this Goddess of Chastity who has come to our extensive country be duly honoured '

The king with the garlanded white umbrella, approved these words and turned towards his learned councillors when they said : 'Either from the Potiyil hills of immortal renown, or from the great Himalayas where the bow-emblem has been carved, a stone should be brought to fashion her image. Both are equally sacred because one is washed by the floods of the Kāvērī and the other by the holy Ganges.'

The monarch replied : 'It is no matter for felicitation if kings born in my family of great swords and high valour, be satisfied merely with picking up a stone from the Potiyil hills and cleansing it in the waters of the ancient Kāvērī.² If the king of the high mountains (Himalayas), where live the twice-born³ Brahmanas⁴ distinguishable by their matted locks of hair, undried garments, three-stringed

1 This shows that the queen also took part in the deliberations of the State. We know from the Rāmāyaṇa that Maṇṭōtari went to Rāvaṇa's court after the death of Prahasta, and dissuaded him by several arguments from fighting Rāmā. (See Dikshitar, Hindu Administrative Institutions, p. 160).

2 This proves beyond doubt that a part of the Kāvērī region belonged to the Cēra Kingdom. It may be noted that the Kāvērī which is seven miles from Vañclkkaruvūr is as much the Cēra river as it is the Cōla.

3 Dvijas of Sanskrit literature.

4 Some of the habits and customs of Brahmanas are mentioned here.

sacred threads on their chests, and the strength of their three sacrificial fires, does not give us the stone needed to carve an image of the great Lady of Chastity, then we, wearing our vañci garland from the south, shall demonstrate to those who have survived those already dead, the instability (kāñci)¹ of infamous lives which do not pursue the ordained path, the bridal *kāñci*² indicative of the giving in marriage of the ever-youthful girl (Umā) born in the ancient family to the moon-crested Dēva (Śiva), and the great kāñci,³ to the opposing northern (king). We shall deprive him (the Himalayas) of his high crown, resplendent like the moon, and shining with a victory-giving garland of mandāra flowers strung together with full-blown vēṅkai blossoms. We shall look to all this.'

With these words, he adorned his elephant-soldiers with vañci garlands, celebrating the auspicious day when the umbrella was taken out (kutainilaivañci),⁴ the glorious success of the Cēra (korṛavañci),⁵ the high distinction of earning the perpetual title the mahārājya,⁶ the great and

1 This is kāñci-tiṇai, a major theme describing a warrior defending his position, wearing a garland of kāñci flowers. (See Tolc., 'Purat', sūtra 24).

2 M akatpār Kāñci. See Pura., veṇpāmālai iv, st. 24.

3 Etirūṇṇital is 'to take a firm stand for making an attack' (Tamil Lexicon p. 525). Cf. Pinkalantai 'Vaṭkar'—etirūṇṇal kāñci).

4 'Theme of a king sending the royal umbrella in advance in an auspicious hour before he actually sets out on an expedition' (Pura., veṇpāmālai iii, st. 3). See also Tamil Lexicon.

5 'Theme extolling a king who destroyed his foes with his sword' (Pura., veṇpāmālai iii, st. 7).

Mārāyavañci is a theme indicating the status of overlordship after vanquishing the enemy. See Tolc., 'Purat', sūtra 8, comm. by Iḷampūraṇar: cf, Pura., veṇpāmālai iii, st. 11).

glorious vañci (peruvañci)¹ victory, and the unmatched fame achieved by the supply of large quantities of food (perumcōrruvañci)² and lastly, the triumphant vaiḷḷai of everlasting glory (korraṇḍai).³ He made his war-attired army wear garlands of unbroken palmyra leaves, and exhorted them saying: 'Outside the golden city of unflowering *Vañci*⁴, we shall wear the vañci garlands⁵ so that they may keep company with our fierce swords.'

Villavaṇ Kōtai (his minister), then addressed the king: 'May your righteous rule last many years! You fought against your equals who surrendered their tiger-flag and fish-flag on the bloody battlefield of Konkaṇ.⁶ This (incident) has reached the ears of elephants stationed in the eight directions.⁷ My eyes will never forget the sight of your advancing elephant in the midst of Tamil hosts which destroyed the joint forces of

1. Peruvañci is yet another theme (Pura., veṇṇāmālai iii, st. 22) treating of setting fire to the enemy's country.

2. Perumcōrruvañci is what the Tolkāppiyam styles perumcōrrunilai; 'Porul', 63. (See also Pura., veṇṇāmālai iii, st. 23.) It is a theme treating of a king feasting his soldiers sumptuously on the eve of a battle.

3. Korraṇḍai is 'a theme indirectly describing the prowess of a king by regretting that the enemy's country will be destroyed' (Tamil Lexicon, p. 1167). See Pura., veṇṇāmālai iii, st. 7; also Tolk., 'Purat', sūtra 8.

4. Cf. Puram., st. 100; also st. 22 and st. 27.

5. Here is a pun on the word vañci. The city is ever young and can never become old on account of the monarch's prowess.

6. The Cera defeated the Pāṇṭya and the Coḷa monarchs and became the overlord of the Tamil country.

7. Diggajas of Sanskrit mythology.

Konkaṇar, Kalingar, the cruel Karunaṭar, Bangalar,¹ Gangar, Kaṭṭiyar² famous for their innumerable spears, and the northern Aryas.

‘Nor can we forget the valour you displayed single-handed, when having made your mother bathe in the full and rising floods of the mighty Ganges,³ you waged such a terrific war against a thousand Aryas, that the cruel God of Death stood aghast.

‘If you now propose to extend the Tamil sway over the entire region fenced in by the roaring sea, there will be none in the whole world who can stop you from doing it. So send a message to the following effect: “The object with which our king goes to the Himalayas is to bring a stone on which to carve the image of a deity.” Seal it with your clay seal⁴ bearing the designs of the strong bow, the fish

1 The enemy kings of the Cēra king. The Bangalar are probably the people of Bengal. The Gangar may be the early Gangas.

2 The Kaṭṭis seemed to have occupied the region, south of Vaṭukarpūmi. They are frequently mentioned in the Akanānūru (st. 44 and st. 226) and also in Kuruntokai, st. 11.

3 This shows that Ceṅkuṭṭuvan had already been to North India once and shown his prowess. From a vague reference in the Puṇanānūru (st. 62 and 63) that when Ceṅkuṭṭuvan’s father and others fell slain in battle their women also committed sati, it is argued that this expedition of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was to secure a stone on which to carve an image of his mother. Against this theory must be set the fact that (1) there is no implicit reference to the sati of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan’s mother, (2) that there is no reference, explicit or implied, of a stone for an image, and (3) that according to Arumpatavuraiāciriyaṛ it means that she was taken on a pilgrimage for a sacred bath.

4 Note the use of the clay seal for letters of administrative importance. It is of interest that similar seals have been discovered among the recent pre-historic finds in the Indus valley.

and the tiger, emblems of the Tamil country, and send it to all the kings of the north.'

Thareupon Aļumpilvē¹ replied:

'The spies of all countries situated in the cool shade of the nāval tree (i.e. Jambūdvīpa or India) never leave the borders of our protecting (capital) Vañci.² Will not these spies send information to their respective kings famous for elephants with ornamental trappings? So, it will be enough if we proclaim (your expedition) by tom-tom in our own city.'

The king of the troop irresistible in battle (Ceṅkuṭṭuvan) agreed. When he reached the glorious unfadable city of Vañci, rich with tribute obtained from expeditions against enemies, it was proclaimed throughout that magnificent city by the beat of a drum carried on the nape of the strong elephant of state.³

'Long live our gracious king! May he protect the world from age to age. Because our guardian monarch marches forth to procure a stone from the great Himalayas inscribed with the bow-emblem, all ye who are kings of the northern countries, come forth to meet him with tributes. Save yourselves, by remembering (before it is too late) the heroic exploit of our monarch who overthrew

1 Aļumpilvēl was apparently a Vēlir chieftain of a small area called Aļumpil. In this sense the word occurs in Caṅkam works like the Akanāṇūru, st. 44 and Maturaikkāñci, ll. 344-5.

2 This proves the extensive nature of the spy system explained in the Kauṭaliya Arthaśāstra and the Tirukkuraļ.

3 A feature of dharma-yuddha, (the dharma-vijaya of the Arthaśāstra and of Aśoka inscriptions). This was to inform everyone concerned beforehand.

the kaṭampu of the sea,¹ and his equally heroic deed of carving the bow-emblem on the Himalayan slopes.² If you will not listen, abandon your wives and lead the lives of anchorites. Long live the army,³ precious as his own face to the king who wears victorious anklets.'

1 See above, canto xxiii, ll. 81-2.

2 There is a special reference to Ceṅkuṭṭuvan's planting the emblem of the bow on the Himalayas in the Cirupāṇārruppaṭal, ll. 47-50.

3 The term sēnāmukham is a Sanskrit expression and means generally a division of an army. In military literature it may also mean a division of the army consisting of three elephants, three chariots, nine horsemen and fifteen footmen.

CANTO XXVI
KALKOT KATAI

OR BRINGING THE STONE

AFTER the tom-tom¹ had been sounded, the king mounted his ancestral lion-throne when the purōhita,² the chief astrologer, the celebrated ministers, and army commanders gathered together and blessed him: 'Long live our king of kings.' They requested him to indicate to them the royal intention (to march) in the (northern) direction. The Cera of the white umbrella, which rose higher than that of all the rival kings of great armies, declared publicly thus: 'If the remarks of the kings of the north, who lead insecure lives, communicated to me by saints residing in the Himalayas, when they came here, are to be passed over in silence, that will cause humiliation to kings such as ourselves. So, if my unfailing sword does not successfully help me to make the northern kings carry on their crowned heads the stone on which the deity's image is to be carved, and if I fail to strike terror into the hearts of my enemy-kings who are ardently war-like and who wear glittering anklets, may I become the wielder

1 See below, canto xxix, 'Uraippāṭṭumaṭai'.

2 The purōhita was an important limb of the State and was a member of the ministry. This reminds us of the status he occupied in the Arthaśāstra polity, where it is said that the arms of the Kṣatriya aided by the science of the Brahmana attain success. The technical term is aśan (Sans., Ācārya). (Ar. Śās, Bk. I, ch. 3).

of a sceptre striking terror in the subjects of my own fertile regions.'

The ācāṇ then said: 'O mighty conqueror in battle! These remarks apply only to kings (the Cōḷa and the Pāṇṭya) wearing garlands of ār and margosa flowers, and beautiful jewelled crowns. O Imayavarampa! Is there any monarch who dares to defy your wrath?¹ They meant no insult to you; so curb your anger.'

At this the astrologer versed in the five kēḷvis,² who knew the effects of the planets in each of the twelve signs of the zodiac,³ rose up and said: 'Powerful king! Long live your valour! The time is now auspicious for making the rulers of this vast earth prostrate themselves before your beautiful lotus-feet. Prepare to start out in that direction which you intend to follow.'

When the monarch of unfailing success heard this, he ordered that his sword and umbrella should be taken northward. Then to the accompaniment of cheers from the Porunar,⁴ the war drum made a deafening noise, so as to cause Ātiśeṣa, bearer of the weighty earth, to bend down

1 Cf. Kuṟaḷveṇṇpā 773.

2 Titī, Vāram, Nakṣatram, Yōgam and Karaṇam. Also Naṭpu (ally), Āṭci (success), Uccam (leading to glory), Pakai (enemy), and Nicam (leading to dishonour).

3 This shows the development of astronomy in the Tamil land and the blind faith of the people in the effects of the movements of planets on individuals and the State. Mauttikan (Sans., Mauhūrtika) is the technical term for the astrologer.

4 Bards who encouraged and cheered an army. That such a system was in vogue, even with regard to Aryan warfare, is testified to by the dramatist Bhāsa and the statesman Kauṭilya. Here it was the purohita who instilled enthusiasm into the minds of the soldiers. (See Hindu Administrative Institutions, p. 294).

his head.¹ Jewelled lamps dispelled the darkness of the night; and (lifting up) their ranks of closely flying banners, the striking-force, the five great assemblies and the eight great groups, the purōhita in the service of the king rich in fierce horses and elephants, financiers, upholders of dharma, and executive officers, all spoke (with one voice): 'Long live the ruler of the whole earth.'²

His sword of increasing martial repute and garlanded white umbrella were then placed on the nape of the great elephant³ accustomed to swallowing large balls of rice, and taken outside to their appointed places near the fortified walls.⁴ Then the monarch who was distinguished by a garland of palmyra leaves intertwined with perfect vañci flowers, entered his assembly hall, and entertained to a grand feast⁵ the leaders of the great troops who were clamorous and eager for vigorous warfare.

The sovereign lord of the sharp sword, decorated his crown of gems with vañci blossoms from the unflowering Vañci when the morning drum sounded at the gate, announcing the time for other kings of the earth⁶ to pay their

1 The reference is to the legend of the serpent Ātisēṣa bearing the heavy weight of the earth.

2 The blessings of the officers of the State on the eve of the march of the army.

3 Paṭṭavarttanam was the name of the State elephant.

4 Preliminaries on the eve of the march of the army. Belief in an auspicious hour was universal and the parasthānam and prayers show the prevalence of superstitious ideas.

5 It is to be noted that the feast was given in the night. See, for an explanation of the term perumcōru, canto xxv, l. 144. and n. 6.

6 A reference to the time for meeting subordinate chieftains.

tributes. With the victorious vañci-wreath were worn the sandals of the great God in whose form the whole universe manifests itself (Śiva), and who wears the crescent in His long, dark matted hair; and having laid the head that bowed to none (else) at His holy shrine,¹ he circumambulated it. The sweet fumes from the sacrificial fires² offered by the Vedic Brahmanas deprived his garland of its lustrous colour. He then mounted the nape of his proud war-elephant.

There appeared before him some persons bearing the prācātam of the Lord (Viṣṇu) who slumbers³ in a (yogic) trance at Āṭakamāṭam⁴ and addressed him with 1 This shows that Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was a follower of the orthodox religion which consisted in the worship of Śiva and Viṣṇu, without any sectarian bias. The temple under reference must have been the Paśupati-Kōil of the present Karūr.

2 Here is a clear reference to the religion followed by the Cēra monarch. It was the Vaidika religion, an important feature of which was the fire-rite. This shows that the Brahmanas of those days were largely engaged in performing Vedic sacrifices, and were agnihōtrins and hence Dikṣitars in the real sense of the term.

3 This refers to the yoganidrā of Viṣṇu as mentioned in the Purāṇas.

4 The identification of Āṭakamāṭam with the Padmanābhāsvāmī temple at Trivandrum by the commentator Arumpatavurai-ācīriyar is unconvincing. (See also K. G. Sesha Aiyar's views in J. I. H., 1932, pp. 135-63).

Āṭakamāṭam is probably a reference to the Vaiṣṇava temple that is now found in the suburb of Karūr. For it is a far cry from Trivandrum to the capital Vañci. To have carried the prāsātam all that way would have taken several days in those times of slow communication and difficult transport. It is impossible to think that the news of the march had reached distant Trivandrum and made the temple authorities go post-haste even to Cranganore for benedictory words: May success attend on Kuṭṭuvan,¹ the lord of the west! Since the king had already placed on his crown of gems the beautiful sandals of the Lord whose matted hair bears the Gangā, he received this pracātam and carried it on his fair, bejewelled shoulders.

As he thus gloriously set forth, the dancing-girls who had gathered in the different theatres appeared with clasped arms and said: 'O conquering monarch! May you under the shadow of your white umbrella on your elephant with its forehead decked with vākai, tumpai and pōntai, present so delightful a sight as to cause our lustrous bangles to become loosened.'²

On the one side Māgada poets,³ Vaitālikas and Sūtas praised his success in the field of battle; on the other, elephant warriors, cavalry captains and soldiers with shining swords,⁴ celebrated the might of the royal sword.

the sake of argument, or to Karūr, to bless that king. It is remarkable that there is no trace of such a Vaiṣṇava temple near or about Cranganore.

1 Kuṭṭuvan is apparently a title adopted by Imayavaramban after he had extended his sway to the Kuṭṭanāṭu, and in the same way the Kuṭakkō implies that the Cēra was also the lord of the western country. It may be noted in passing that these two nāṭus, the Kuṭa-nāṭu and the Kuṭṭa-nāṭu, are portions of the Kaṭṭamalai-nāṭu which formed a large division of the ancient Cēra empire.

2 The implication is that they are soon to be separated from their lovers.

3 (Sans., Māgadha.) The presence of Māgadhas and the Sūtas was a North Indian convention. Their function was to glorify the king in season and out of season. Cf. Ar. Śās., Bk. X, ch. 3.

4 The foot-soldiers were often enlisted from the Maravar class who were a virile and hardy tribe.

(In this manner) the monarch left Vañci, like Indra leaving his celestial city to attack the Asuras. The leaders of the army and the advance guard of his forces, which seemed to have spread to the very shores of the foaming sea, made the backs of the mountains bend (beneath their weight) and caused the plains to quake. He marched thus with his prancing steeds and decorated chariot corps, till he reached the outskirts of the blue mountain (Nilagiri).¹ There the swaying elephants, the chariots, the horses and the veteran foot-soldiers stayed in a camp (pāṭi) protected by zealous guards. The king, resplendent as the sun, graced Mother Earth with his holy feet, and as he went to his great chamber he received the praises of his able warriors.

Afterwards, prompted by a desire to see this ruler of the vast earth who was like Indra² in wealth, saints moving in the sky left for the royal assembly and appeared with their bodies flashing like lightning. The monarch rose up and rendered them obeisance,³ whereupon they said: 'Listen, O Cēra born in Vañci through the grace of Śiva⁴ of the matted hair! We are going to the Malaya (Potiyil) hills. It is your duty to protect the learned Brahmanas who live there, O great king!' They then blessed him and departed. Soon after appeared the

1 The army halted at the Nilgiri hills.

2 The comparison of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan with Indra who went to attack the Asuras, shows the influence exerted by Sanskrit legends in the Tamil land.

3 This statement is appropriate to the Purāṇic tradition that the Gandharvas, Yakṣas, Kinnaras and others used to fly in the air. As they were supposed to be divine beings, they were also worshipped.

4 Here is further evidence to establish the personal religion of the Cēra King.

dancers from the Konkaṇa country,¹ exclaiming: 'Long live the lord of the sea-girt earth!' The fierce Karuṇāṭar in their respective dresses and ornaments, and actresses whose dark curly hair was loosely woven with shining garlands, whose incipient breasts were adorned with (jewelled) chains and whose long eyes resembled dark carps, sang thus in the pāṇivari:²

'The black koels send forth their note: the bees produce the music of the yā!! The summer, when buds bloom, has come! Yet our lover has not appeared.'

Next came the people from the Kuṭaku country, with their (dancing) girls, possessors of fine bangles and carp-like long eyes. They celebrated in song the *kuravai*³ peculiar to winter, thus:

'O lady wearing bangles of fine workmanship! Put on your jewellery; watch the moment; the clouds gather rapidly with loud thunder-claps. The chariot in which my lover rode has returned. He has finished his work.'

The Ōvar⁴ also came blessing the king: 'May our king with the mighty sword bring his expedition to a

1 The kingdoms of Konkaṇ and Karuṇāṭaka are under reference.

2 Pāṇivari was the song sung during summer by the heroine who expected the arrival of her lover.

3 Kārkkuravai is a kind of dancing and music appropriate to the winter season. Here it may be noted that at one and the same time while it was summer in Konkaṇ it was winter in Kuṭagu which bears testimony to the author's accurate geographical knowledge. It is also worth noting that this is the third kind of kuravai mentioned in this classic. The other two already noticed are Ācciyarkuravai and Kuṇṛakkuravai.

4 Ōviyar, a tribe. Arumpatavuraiāciriyaṛ speaks of them as āṭṭālar (panegyrists). This is not convincing as panegyrists have already been mentioned.

successful end¹ and live long with his flourishing circle of friends and followers.'

The wielder of the lance that made his enemies quake rewarded those who praised (him), in the manner ordained by the master of dances,² with rare ornaments of which they had no knowledge. When he rested, the gate-keeper came and reported: 'O king of the righteous sceptre, and of the lofty standard with the bow-emblem! One hundred and two actresses, and two hundred and eight accompanying singers, and one hundred jesters who are adepts in the ninety-six modes of pāsaṇḍa;³ one hundred lofty chariots,⁴ five hundred spirited elephants, ten thousand steeds with trimmed manes, twenty thousand carts laden with different kinds of merchandise⁵ from the northern country unknown to other places, with their contents marked by pictographs, and lastly a thousand *kañcukas*⁶

1 Literally, 'finish the work assigned to his sword'.

2. An officer of the State (perhaps in charge of fine arts like music and dancing).

3 Ninety-six kinds of pāsaṇḍas are distinguished. There is nothing to corroborate this in Sanskrit literature. Apparently there were a number of heretical sects.

4 The numerical strength of the army and commissariat which followed Ceṅkuṭṭuvan in his northern expedition.

5 Here is evidence of the use of the Indus script and the Egyptian script in the ancient Tamil land, implying a large volume of trade between these countries and the far south of India.

6 Kañcukamākkaḷ, literally, 'men attired in splendid dress.' From the context we gather, that they were messengers of whom different kinds are distinguished. Kañcukin was an important character in Sanskrit dramas. He was generally an attendant on the harem, or a chamberlain, and usually an aged Brahmana. See Vikramor., Act III, sc. 1. and Śakuntala, Act V, sc. 3.

with well-coiffured heads, under the leadership of Cañcayan,¹ have arrived at the gate.'

The king said: 'Let the dancing-girls, the great officials, and musicians, both vocal and instrumental, come hither along with Cañcayan.' Cañcayan then entered the splendid assembly hall of the righteous king, made his obeisance, and after praising him in many ways, he introduced to him in order the most distinguished officials, and also the hundred and two players, and addressed him thus: 'O king wielding the righteous sceptre! The Nūrruvar Kannar² who have no differences with you and are quite friendly, have said: "If the expedition to the north by the Cēra king is intended to select a stone to carve the figure of a deity upon, we will take a stone from the lofty Himalayas, bathe it in the rushing currents of the Ganges, and bring it to him. We are capable of doing this." May you live long to rule over the sea-girt earth.'

The protecting king whose ocean-like army could devour the lives of enemy-kings possessing victorious lances, said in reply: 'Balakumara's sons, Kanaka and

1 The chief ambassador was Cañcayan.

2 It is difficult to interpret this term. The difficulty lies in deciding whether the expression stands for a certain individual or a group of individuals. If it is singular number, it may refer to King Śatakarṇi. Taking it in the plural, Pandit M. Raghava Ayyangar identifies them with the chiefs of Mālva. Considering the fact (which the Cilappatikāram warrants) the Nūrruvar Kannar had the command of both banks of the Ganges, meaning that their sway extended to E. Mālva, and the fact of the Mālva chief being present at the consecration ceremony of Pattinīṭēvi, it is reasonable to assume that an Andhra king is under reference, and that he was an ally of Cēnkuṭṭuvan.

Vijaya,¹ and other northern monarchs, with unrestrained tongues² on the occasion of a royal banquet spoke disparagingly and in ignorance of the valour of Tamil kings. With exceeding wrath, even like the God of Death, this army marches forth.³ Therefore instruct the Nūrruvar Kannar and tell them to prepare for us a great fleet of boats in order that we may cross the sacred Ganges.'

After Cañcayan had gone away, the kañcukamākkal, a thousand in number, who were faultless in speech, brought chips of sandalwood and pearls from the deep sea together with tributes dispatched by the Pāṇṭyan:⁴ then the guardian king directed his pictographic scribes to send, through them, letters (of acknowledgement) sealed with clay, to all those kings.⁵

After (the messengers) had left (for their respective destinations) the ruler of the sea-girt earth received the praises of the chief officials in charge of different local units, broke up his camp and marched to the holy Ganges which he crossed, on the fleet of boats supplied by the Kannar, to the northern bank where they welcomed him. Passing beyond that region also he proceeded to the

1 For a probable identification, see K. G. Sesha Ayyar's article on 'The Date of Cilappatikāram' in the Madras Christian College Magazine, 1917.

2 Cf. Kuralvenpā 127.

3 It is interesting to note that royal banquets were held, recalling modern State banquets. The Arumpatavurai interprets the term virundin mannar as 'new kings'. In this case the meaning is that 'Kaṇaka and Vijaya and other new kings spoke thus in a meeting.'

4 This shows that the Pāṇṭyan king was a subordinate chief-tain of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan.

5 This institution answers to the lekhaka of the Arthaśāstra.

uttara¹ country of the enemy hemmed in by a vast expanse of water, and with his army entered the camp near the battlefield.

Confronted with such a warrior, Uttaraṇ (Sans. Uttara), Vicittiraṇ (Vicitra), Uruttiraṇ (Rudra), Bairvaṇ (Bhairava), Cittiraṇ (Citra), Śingaṇ (simha), Tanuttaraṇ (Dhanurdhara), Śivetaṇ (Śiveta), and other kings of the north, along with Kaṇaka and Vijaya marched at the head of a confederate army vast as the ocean, saying: 'Let us see the prowess of the southern Tamil kings.' When they advanced thus Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ inwardly rejoiced, even as a hungry lion in search of prey would rejoice at the sight of a herd of elephants, and sprang upon the different forces of the enemy decorated with kāñci garlands. The pandal of flags swallowed the sun's rays; the earth (the battlefield) re-echoed to the sounds of the cruel drums covered with well-tanned skins, white conches, roaring drums, long horns and sweet cymbals (pāṇṭil),² reinforced by the all-pervading thunder of the royal war-drum with its hairy covering³ seeming to devour lives given in sacrifice.

At that time the volume of dust raised by archers with bows on their shoulders, by soldiers with fierce spears in their hands, by warriors with leather shields, by mighty chariot-warriors, by elephant-men on their white-tusked

1 What territory actually constituted this uttara country is difficult to say. Perhaps it is a reference to the territory north of the Ganges.

2 A reference to certain martial musical instruments.

3 It was the custom to have the royal drum covered with the skin of a powerful bull which had vanquished a tiger by sheer prowess. The hair was not removed from the skin. (See Civakacintāmaṇi, st. 2899 and Maturaikkāñci, ll. 732-3.)

elephants, and by fleet horsemen, spread over that vast region blindfolding the people and choked the clappers of the bells hanging from the necks of the war-elephants, and the loud-toned conches attached to the stately standards—which prevented them from striking more terror.

The vanguard of one army came in close contact with the other and confusion prevailed. Heads and shoulders were cut off and separated when the archers gathered the dead bodies into heaps. The headless bodies (kavan-tam)¹ of the (soldiers) cut off by the sword, danced keeping time to the music of female ghosts, whose eyes resembled one-faced drums. Female goblins formed themselves in groups and danced drinking the blood gushing from the carcasses mixed with human flesh.

The valorous soldiers of the Arya (northern) kings celebrated for their death-dealing chariot forces, were thus slain and piled upon the battlefield; the tops of their lofty chariots, as well as their massive fighting elephants and the groups of swift-footed horses, were destroyed and piled together in heaps² by the Cēra with the brilliant anklet, who pompously wore on his high crown a fitting garland of *tumpai*³ flowers intermixed with palmyra leaves, and showed himself to the Arya kings in the battlefield like the God of Death riding fast on his buffalo⁴ to swallow up all lives within a day.

1 See Paṭṭinappālai, I. 236 and II. 256-60. Cf. Matsya Purāṇa, ch. 50.

2 The term nūllāṭṭu means killing in large numbers and piling up the carcasses. See Malaipaṭu, st. 87: comm.

3 Tumpai was an emblem of unique victory.

4 Mahīṣa is the steed of the God of Death.

The mighty spearmen Kaṇaka and Vijaya who bore angry spears in their hands and their fifty-two able chariot-warriors who had spoken insultingly of the Tamil kings, now tell a prey to the fury of Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ. Some others dressed their hair in coiled plaits, some wore ascetic robes, some smeared themselves with ashes, some looked like anchorites seated on pedestals with peacock's feathers, some as minstrels, some with musical instruments on their shoulders, and some as dancers threw away their swords and went to different regions in suitable disguises.

But those who had to guard the accoutred elephants shook with fear. These animals Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ yoked like mere oxen, and using swords as sticks, he brought down the sheaf (the enemy) and by beating threshed it.¹ Him who ploughed the battle-ground with his spear, the goblins praised. They lifted with their long bangled quivering hands, the dark crowned heads of the dead and displaying them in front they sang and praised the First God in the celebrated muṇṇērkkuravai (comparing this battle) with that at the time of the churning of the milk-ocean, and with the battle waged in sea-swept Lankā, and also with the war when He, sea-hued, drove the chariot (of Arjuna); the *piṇṇērkkuravai*² consisted of a goblin-dance in that burial ground (the battlefield).

1 The term starl-tirittal means literally 'threshing grain with cattle'. The threshing floor is compared here to the battle-ground, and the grain to the enemy ranks, and the cattle to elephants. (See Puram., st. 371).

2 Piṇṇērkkuravai is a kind of war dance, generally danced behind the war-chariot of honour to celebrate victory in war. Similarly there was muṇṇērkkuravai, a kind of dance danced in front of the war-chariot of honour. In this particular case the dance of the goblins represented the piṇṇērkkuravai.

With crowned heads as the oven on which broken heads were placed as cooking vessels and shoulder-blades used as ladles, the goblin-cook fed each goblin with a belly-full of animal food. Delighted with that ghastly meal, the goblin groups said this as grace: 'Let the king wielding the righteous sceptre, who fought and won this dharmaic battle,¹ live long.'

Ceṅkuṭṭuvan of the mighty spear who had brought the war to a successful end said to his foot-messengers: 'Go and courteously assure our support to all those who uphold the Vēdas in the northern region, and who lead holy lives by keeping alight sacrificial fires.' Afterwards the protecting king, who had won the battle and accomplished his object with Villavan Kōtai, commanded several differently armed units of his army to secure from the golden-crested Himalayas a stone slab from which he proceeded to carve the image of the peerless Goddess of Chastity.

1 This shows that the slaughter of non-combatants was not countenanced. When once the sword was cast off and soldiers had put on ascetic robes they were not interfered with. It may also be taken to mean that while it was a righteous war from the point of view of the goblins it was really an unrighteous war.

CANTO XXVII

NIRPPATAIK KATAI

OR

BATHING THE STONE

AFTER the stone slab brought from the renowned Himalayas in the north had been carved into the figure of the goddess Pattinī, the rain-bestower, it was placed on the resplendent crowns of Kanaka and Vijaya, who had offered battle to Ceṅkuṭṭuvan of the angry spear, the king of the shining anklet, who as if he had assumed the function of the Lord of Death in eighteen *nālikais*¹ swallowed up numbers of lives of the Arya kings who had not hitherto respected the prowess of the southern Tamils so that this sea-girt world might add this to the list of battles fought respectively for eighteen years,² eighteen months³ and eighteen days.⁴

1 Sixty nālikais make one day and night. One hour is equal to $2\frac{1}{2}$ nālikais.

2 The reference is to a Dēvāsura-yuddha but we have not come across a Dēvāsura war which lasted for eighteen years, though a number of similar wars are mentioned in the Purāṇas.

3 This seems to be a reference to the Rāma-Rāvaṇa-yuddha. There is no authority for the statement that the Rāmāyaṇa war lasted for eighteen months. Even if we take into consideration the Khara-yuddha which is said to have been fought in Hēmata (roughly January), Rāvaṇa was slain at the beginning of the following April. This calculation gives a duration of only fifteen months. But Kamban in describing the shedding of the blood of Śūrpaṇakā, the sister of Rāvaṇa, remarks that it was practically the beginning of the war between Rāma and Rāvaṇa. If this tradition is to be believed the total duration of the war may be taken as eighteen months.

4 The reference is to the great battle fought at Kurukṣetra, the contending parties being the Kauravas and Pāṇṇavas. This duration corresponds to that cited in the epic Mahābhārata.

Ceṅkuṭṭuvan who put to death in the field of battle advancing hosts of the enemy in a single day with his army of frightful lances, came back to the banks of the mighty Ganges, and had the stone intended for the goddess Pattinī bathed in conformity with Śāstraic rules, with the help of masters versed in ritual.¹ There, on the southern bank of the crystal-clear Ganges, the king entered the camp in a wide plain finely fitted by the Arya kings with a spacious palace,² artistic porches, golden islets, pantals beautified by flowers, private chambers, large flower-groves, lotus pools, dancing-halls and much else, to meet the needs of that highly renowned monarch.

He summoned to his presence the sons of those warriors who:

had put an end to the ambitious enemy kings in those vast regions and made the daughters of Heaven³ garland them in wedlock;

had played havoc in the battlefield, and though defeated in action were not disheartened but lay with their shoulders and heads, above value, chopped off;

had triumphed over their enemies, though but hired soldiers, by the use of spears, ere their own bodies were cut asunder in that wide battlefield; had dropped down dead with their swords, their ancestry highly applauded and praised in a kuravai dance by goblins with sunken eyes;

1 This is another reference to the fact that the king was a follower of the orthodox school of Hinduism.

2 The reception accorded to Ceṅkuṭṭuvan by his allies in the north in honour of his victory.

3 The reference is to vira-svarga, set apart for bold warriors who remain in action to the end and give up their lives heroically. It is said that such soldiers enjoy heavenly bliss.

had fallen dead with their fellow-soldiers, causing the demise of their wives¹ who wore sparkling jewels on their necks; had, as the vanguard of the army, adorned their crowns with vākai wreaths in honour of having killed the front ranks of the enemy with their spears; had fallen down with an ornamental staff fixed in each of their strong chariots and stood with blood on their bodies.

He also summoned soldiers who had taken possession of the field of battle after having cut off, so as to move even Yama to compassion, the dark crowned heads renowned for incalculable prowess, together with warriors whose breastplates had been pierced through to their backs causing wounds on their chests. The monarch who, by his great triumph, had won renown worthy of celebration (by poets) called to each of them 'Come near me' and rewarded one and all with a golden vākai flower which was more than he would present even on his birthday.² He also decorated himself with a garland of palmyra and *tumpai*³ flowers, befitting that great victory.

1 It was the custom for wives to take their lives after their husbands had died heroically on the field. It does not necessarily mean that these ladies went to the field with their husbands: Tolkāppiyānār prohibited this. (See 'Porul', sūtra 175).

2 Rewards for the sons of heroic rulers who fell on the field. The comparison of these gifts with those on the king's birthday shows that the custom was to give gifts on a lavish scale on that particular occasion. The day is known as perumāṅkalam. (See Tolk., 'Porul', sūtra 90. Cf. Veḷḷaṇināḷ, Perumpāṇā., l. 295. See above Cila., canto xxiii, l. 56).

3 Tumpai is a symbolical representation of victory. Vākai represents complete victory.

While he was thus sitting on his throne, the Brahmana Māṭalan appeared before him and said: 'Long live our king! The seashore song of the lady Mātavi¹ made the crowns of Kanaka and Vijaya bear a weight. Ruler of the conquered sea-girt earth, may you live long!' The king replied: 'You have spoken enigmatically, and are not likely to be understood by some among these enemy kings. What did you say, O Brahmana, learned in the four Vēdas? Please explain.'

The Brahmana Māṭalan then continued: 'The maid Mātavi, whilst sporting on the cool beach, had a lover's quarrel (with Kōvalan). Then governed by fate,² she sang the seashore song appropriate to her dance. This resulted not in their reunion but in their separation, and necessitated his entry with his virtuous wife into the ancient towered city of Madura, whose reigning king with his wreath of leaves attained blissful heaven as a result of the murder of Kōvalan, whose wife, O lord of the Kuṭavar,³ entered your country. And now she is being borne upon the crowned heads of the northern kings.

'Be good enough to listen also to the reason for my coming here, O king of kings holding the illustrious spear! After going round the Potiyil hills sacred to the

1 The implication is that but for the song, Kōvalan would not have left Mātavi's house, and there would have been no tragedy and no consequent glorification of Kaṇṇaki as Dēvi, which necessitated Ceṅkuṭṭuvan's northern expedition in which Kanaka and Vijaya were vanquished.

2 The author seems to emphasize throughout the book the working of destiny and the fruits of past karmā.

3 This may indicate that the Cēra was the lord of the western region as the Cōla was of the eastern (Kuṇakku).

great sage¹ and bathing in the famous ghat of Kumari (Cape Comorin), I was returning, when, as if impelled by fate, I went into Madura belonging to far-famed Tennavan of the sharp sword. There when Mātari heard that the beautiful (Kaṇṇaki) had defeated the Pāṇṭyan king of the mighty army with her anklet, she proclaimed in the *tātērumaṇram*²: “O people of the cowherd community! Kōvalaṇ has done no wrong; it is the king who has erred; I have lost her to whom I gave refuge. Have the king’s umbrella and sceptre fallen from the righteous path?” With these words, she threw herself into the burning flames in the dead of night.

‘Kavunti, distinguished for her holy penance, waxed wroth; but when she heard of the death of the great king renowned for his righteous sceptre, her ire was appeased and she burst out: “Was this the fate of those who joined my company?” She took a vow to die of starvation³ and thus gave up her life.

‘I heard in full detail all this and also of the devastation that overtook the great city of Madura ruled by the Pāṇṭyan⁴ of the golden car. Overcome by grief I went back to my native place, the ancient capital of the Cōlas⁵ and informed the chief men there of this. Kōvalaṇ’s

1 The sage under reference is Agastya.

2 Tātērumaṇram was the common meeting-place of cowherds and cowherdresses, and was generally under a tree.

3 The practice of sallēkana or committing suicide by slow starvation is commended to Jainas and their ascetics in particular. Tradition says that Chandragupta Maurya starved himself to death.

4 One title of the Pāṇṭyan king was Selḷyaṇ.

5 Kaverippūmpattṇam, father heard what had happened to his son and daughter-in-law and also to the righteous monarch of Madura, and became deeply afflicted. He distributed all his wealth in charity, entered the seven Indra-Vihāras,¹ and began to practise self-denial like the three hundred monks who roam the sky, having renounced the world to obtain release from the cycle of births. The wife of him who thus renounced, unable to endure the sorrowful news of the death of her son under such tragic circumstances, died of pity. Kaṇṇaki's father also (at his fate) gave away his wealth in religious gifts, and adopted dharma in the presence of Ājivakas² like sages engaged in penance of a high order. The noble wife of him who made these gifts gave up her good life within a few days.

'The lady Mātavi heard all this and said to her good mother: "I am in duty bound to live a virtuous life. Do not allow Maṇimekalai to take to the life of a courtesan which leads to great suffering." Shorn of her hair with the flower-wreaths therein, she entered the Buddha-Vihāra and received holy instruction (aram).³ These people died because they heard this news from me; therefore I come to bathe in the holy waters of the Ganges (in order to purify myself). Long live you, O king of kings!'

1 The Buddhist temple.

2 Kaṇṇaki's father turned out to be an Ājivaka, while Kaṇṇaki's own religion seems to have been Jainism or Buddhism. This is another proof of the non-differentiation of religious sects in the early centuries of Christian era.

3 The great transformation in Mātavi's life is remarkable. As a courtesan her fidelity is all the more appreciable. She became a regular Buddhist bhikṣuṇī by casting off her hair, the outward sign of a sannyāsinī. She also led her daughter to that way of thinking.

At this the mighty lord of the Cēras, wearing the unfadable vañci garland strung with palmyra leaves and tumpai, asked: 'May I hear what happened in the highly flourishing Pāṇṭyaṇ kingdom after the king's death?' Māṭalaṇ the Brahmana spoke again: 'May you live long, O king of the great world. You destroyed in a day the nine umbrellas of nine enemy kings¹ who joined together in an alliance against your brother-in-law Kiḷḷivaḷavaṇ² and who would neither countenance his elevation as crown prince nor listen to his commands but who caused ruin to his thriving kingdom; by this you re-established his golden wheel in its rightful place.

'O Poraiyaṇ who adorned thyself with a garland of palmyra leaves on the success of thy sword, held in thy right hand, in uprooting the margosa with its long tufted branches guarded by Paḷaiyaṇ³ be gracious and listen. The victorious Vēr-Celiyaṇ⁴ residing at Korkai⁵ offered a human sacrifice of one thousand goldsmiths in a day to the divine Pattinī who had twisted off one of her breasts.

1 See also below, canto xxvlii, ll. 116-7. From this it is seen that the battle was fought at Nērivāyll. See also Patirru, Fifth Ten, patikam; also T.A.S., Vol. III, pp. 102-4.

2 The reference is to Perunarklīlī, son of Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ's mother's brother and therefore a first cousin of Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ.

3 The lord of Mōkūr, a small but powerful of the hills. This line gives us a glimpse into the ancient practice according to which every chieftain had a guardian tree (kāvalmaram), and the uprooting of that tree by an enemy king amounted to the defeat of the king of the land. See Akam., st. 347, ll. 3-5; and also st. 127. The reference is to the kaṭampu being felled by Imayavarampaṇ.

4 Vēr-Celiyaṇ was the ruler of Korkai.

5 The Pāṇṭyaṇ kingdom had two capitals, Madura and Korkai, corresponding to the Cōḷa and the Cēra.

And when ancient Madura lost her glory and was chafing in untold trouble owing to royal injustice, this Pāṇṭyan prince of the lunar line,¹ which was celebrated for the exemplary way in which it gave protection to the people of the southern regions, mounted in succession the royal throne of Madura, like the sun mounting in the morning, with his rays crimson, the divine chariot with the single wheel² yoked to seven horses with tiny bells attached to their necks. May the king of our land live for all time protecting the world from aeon to aeon; live he in fame.'

During the time when the king sat listening to these words of the Brahmana, the wide world was enveloped in complete darkness. With the disappearance of the sun, the thick spreading twilight reddened the western sky where the shining crescent appeared. While the great monarch was gazing at the beauty of the crescent,³ the court astrologer rose up and spoke words appropriate to 1 That the Pāṇṭyas belonged to the lunar race is evident from more than one reference in the text. If there is any significance in this ancient tradition, prevalent as long ago as the early centuries of the Christian era, it shows that the Pāṇṭyas were not altogether of South Indian stock, purely Tamil in character, but a branch of the lunar line established in the Tamil districts long before epic times.

2 This is in accordance with Sanskrit legends where the sun is said to ride on a chariot whose single wheel is yoked to seven horses. For details see Viṣṇupurāṇa, Bk. II, ch. viii, st. 2-5.

3 The custom of everyone, from king to peasant, worshipping the moon on the second evening after new moon day was supposed to bring health and wealth. See 'The Lunar Cult in India' in The Indian Antiquary, September 1933.

the occasion : 'In is now thirty-two months¹ since we left Vañci. Long live the ruler of the earth.' Afterwards the king went along the car street of his camp, lined with strong wooden stakes and enclosed by high, curved curtains of cloth, and casting his eyes upon the hill-like tents, small and big, here and there, went beyond his private chamber down a side-lane and mounted the golden throne picturesquely decorated and beautified by the handiwork of expert artists of the palace. He sent word to Mātalan through the gate-keeper and asked him : 'Now that the princes of the great and fertile Cōla kingdom have died, does the reigning sovereign exercise him sway without fault and with success?'

Mātalan, the peaceful Brahmana, blessed him : 'O my king, may you live long!' Then he said : 'Will there ever be a time when the sharp spear of the Cōla, which, to the astonishment of the Dēvas who shine with lustrous ornaments destroyed the three fortresses (suspended from the sky),² swerves from its upright path? This cannot happen to the righteous sceptre of the monarch who carved and offered the flesh of his own body to a pecking kite,³ in order to relieve its hunger and to remove the 1 This indicates that it was two years and eight months since Ceṅkuṭṭuvan had left his capital. A considerable portion of this time must have been taken in the march of his vast army when there were no means of quick transport.

2 See below, canto xxix, 'Ammāṇaivari', l. 4. For similar references see Puṛam., st. 39; Maṇḍ., canto 1, l. 4. Later works like the Rājarājacōlan Ula (Kaṇṇi, 13) and the Vikramacōlan Ula (Kaṇṇi) refer to this incident.

3 In the Mahābhārata the story goes thus : in order to test king Śibi's impartial justice Indra and Agni assumed the forms of a hawk and a pigeon respectively. The pigeon which was pursued by the hawk sought shelter from the king. The hawk severe affliction of the dove hopping on its tiny feet. There can never be trouble even in times of adversity to the lord whose country is protected by the river Kāveri.' At these words from Māṭalan, the foremost of the learned Brahmanas, the great king and wielder of the lance, wearing the palmyra garland, became mightily pleased, and saying, 'O Brahmana! Māṭalan please accept', he honoured him with a gift of fifty tulāms of pure gold equal to his own weight.¹

Afterwards he gave leave to the Arya kings, the Nūruvar Kannar, to go back to their own prosperous kingdoms. Next he commanded his thousand messengers—noted for their fierce replies to haughty questions asked of them by enemy kings—to exhibit to the two great Tamil kings, the royal princes of big armies who fled for their lives disguised as ascetics, and the Arya hermademand of the king the pigeon, its legitimate prey. The king who had promised protection to the pigeon offered to give any substitute for it. The hawk claimed the flesh of the king himself. He gladly cut off a piece of flesh and had it weighed. To his amazement the pigeon outweighed all pieces of flesh. Then Sibi himself got into the scale, whereupon Indra and Agni resumed their genuine forms and glorified his sacrificing spirit (Vana Parva, ch. 197). For a more or less similar version see the Jātakas, Vol. IV, pp. 250 ff. This forms the subject of one of the frescoes at Ajanta, though the fresco is considerably damaged. See G. Yazdani's Ajanta, Part I, pp. 4-7. See also N. J. Krom, Barābudūr (1927), Vol. I, pp. 275-7.

¹ A measurement equal to one's weight. This means that Ceṅkuṭṭuvan's weight was equal to that of 50 tulāms of gold, and he must therefore have been of large stature. This is also one of the sixteen supreme gifts enjoined on all and on the king particularly. It is clear from the Vijayanagara inscriptions that its kings performed these sixteen gifts. See Dikshitar, Matsya Purāṇa, A Study, pp. 95-100.

phrodite¹ distinguished for her dimpled cheeks, dark tuft carplike long eyes tinged red at the corners, lustrous earrings, red mouth with white teeth and sūṭakam and other bangles on her shoulders resembling bamboos, swelling young breasts, slender waist which looked like lightning, and anklets on her little feet, and also (to present) the captive kings Kanaka and Vijaya who fought because of their ignorance of the great Tamil valour. symbolized by the blemishless palmyra (garland).

In the morning, after undisturbed sleep the bee (dwelling) in the blossoming lotuses of those vast regions watered by the Ganges, was everywhere murmuring yāl-like music. The young rising sun appeared on the lofty top of the eastern hills, spreading its wide rays. The conquering ruler of the western regions (Ceṅkuṭṭuvan), decorated his wreath of vākai flowers with tumpai of the north, went round the famous camp city, and started in a southern direction with his victorious army.

In the many-storied mansion piercing the sky (in the city of Vañci) where the Goddess of Prosperity ever dwells, was the golden harem overspread with an artistic flowery canopy, the work of skilled hands, ornamented with hanging festoons of pearls and flowers strung in rows, and glittering with the dazzle of diamonds and of lustrous gems ingeniously set at random in gold thread. Here shone the queen's beautiful gold bedstead, borne by its exquisite golden legs and covered with the soft down shed during the embraces of swans, worthy of the company of her lord¹ in retirement. There the queen rested, yet could not sleep (because of her separation).

1 For a more or less similar description of the pēṭi (hermaphrodite) see Maṇi, canto iii, ll. 116-25. This custom of sending a pēṭi along with captured kings is peculiar and seems to imply that there was no difference between the pēṭi and the vanquished monarch.

At that time the maidservants who had heard of the triumph of the chariot and sword of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan in the battlefield, and who were skilled in all modes of giving welcome news, (approached her) wishing her long life and praising her in many a song, said: '(O Lady), abandon now sorrow at the separation of your bosom-lord.' Next the small-bodied, the hunch-backed and the dwarfed waited upon her and said: 'Let Beauty reappear! The great lord is come. Dress your fragrant flowery hair with day-time ornaments.'²

Then was also heard the hill song (kuṛiṅcippāṇi),³ 'Let the path of him who returns on the fleeting elephant, decked with vākai and the tumpai of the north, be shortened' sung by the Kurava maids in different ways. Waiting in their raised lofts they beheld the forester,⁴ stupefied by drinking honey from honey-combs on bamboos, failing in his duty of hurling stones from slings at big elephants which trespassed and slept on the extensive millet fields.

The noisy song (ōtaippāṇi)⁵ of the ploughmen was heard: 'Having pulled down the great fortresses of the 1 It may mean that two mattresses were spread one over the other on the bedstead.

2 Wives wore no jewellery during the absence of their husbands. Cf. also Cila., canto iv, ll. 47-57.

3 Songs characteristic of the four regions into which the whole land was divided were sung, beginning with the hill song.

4 From this we understand that forest-products were protected by the State watchmen. They lived in lofts and their chief article of diet seems to have been honey.

5 ōtaippāṇi is a song characteristic of the marutam region.

northern kings, the lord of the Kuṭavar, who ploughed the enemy's country with asses and sowed white millet,¹ is come; O bullocks! you need not bear tomorrow the heavy plough; for it is the king's birthday² when the fetters of the imprisoned will be removed.'

Beside the celebrated bathing that, attractive like Indra's bow in the sky, and spread with the paints, scented powders and flowers of the bathers in the cool Āṇ-Porunai, the music of the flute (kuḷalpāṇi)³ was heard: 'The bowman is coming with herds of cattle from the far famed Himalayas. O cattle, you will mix with them'. This was sung by cowherds who had tied their tufts with flower-wreaths of charming kuvaḷai nurtured by the sucking bee, and of the sweet-smelling lotus with fully open petals, when they stood on the stem of the blossomed screw-pine, after driving the king's cattle to their watering Place.

And there was the well-phrased love-song (antimpāṇi):⁴ 'Our king Vāṇavan has returned to fondle the shoulders and the swelling breasts of his youthful queen. Maidens! Let us sing the vañci song⁵ in praise of his tumpai adorned with palmyra.' This was sung in the language of lovers by fisher-girls who assembled on the seashore in groups beneath the punnai tree on the sands washed by the frothy waves playing ammāṇai and who gathered in their open, bangled hands, lustrous pearls taken out of conches with clefts in their right sides.

1 Kavaṭi may also be interpreted as cowrie.

2 The term vellāṇi in the text stands for the king's birthday. It was a custom for the king to dress himself in white on that particular day as a symbol of purity and grace.

3 The song of the mullai region.

4 The song of the neytal or the maritime region.

5 The vañci song was sung in honour of victory.

Listening attentively to these songs, the mighty (sleepless) queen (Kōpperuntēvi)¹ replaced her close-fitting bangles. The conches blew. Seated on the topmost point of the swift State elephant, under the garlanded white umbrella, Ceṅkuṭṭuvan with a vākai wreath on his crown entered Vañci, welcomed by its citizens in a procession of carts drawn by elephants.²

1 The name of the queen was Iḷaṅkō-vēṇmaḷ. The poet impresses upon us that she was an ideal wife and observed vows as a chaste wife should during the absence of her lord. She passed practically sleepless nights and having discarded her ornaments during the king's absence, put them on again when she heard that her lord was entering the capital.

2 Elephants were yoked to vehicles and to ride on them was perhaps the privilege of royalty. A reference to the existence of such conveyances is also made in the Paṭirru., Fifth Ten, paṭikam.

CANTO XXVIII

NATUKAR KATAI

OR

THE CONSECRATION

EVENING, when flowers blossom and many say their prayers, took possession of the ancient city of Vañci renowned for the wealth¹ of its great king's victory over the world, and for his conquering sword and tall golden umbrella² which like the moon cools the earth. At that hour maidens with shining bangles offered pretty flowers before a lighted lamp³ burning with a white flame, and prayed: 'Long live the king of the whole world.'

Ladies with collyrium-painted eyes and with firm, round, and youthful breasts warmly⁴ embraced the sword warriors who had brought the king's mission to a successful end,⁵ and who wore wreaths of palmyra leaves and gold chains worked with flowers. The chests of some had been pierced by the white tusks of elephants; the chests of others had been scarred with deep wounds caused by long lances; the deep and shining chests of still others had been pierced by shooting arrows; while the jewel-decorated chests of the rest were cleft by sharp swords.

1 For similar expressions see Padirru., st. 82, l. 16 and Maturaikkāñci. l. 763.

2 The stick and the top of the umbrella were made of gold.

3 See above, canto ix, ll. 1-3, for the mores of household women in their evening prayers.

4 Cf. Kallinka., Kāṭai., l. 35.

5 See below ll. 133-4

On that evening, their (ladies') oblique and passionate glances like the flower-arrows of the god with the fish flag, from under the curved dark eyelashes on their moon-like faces, amidst thick clouds of sleek hair fragrant with fumes of incense, conveyed the message (of their hearts) to these young warriors whose chests were adorned with jewels. They extolled the evening, saying: 'This is indeed a medicament;' and the women, whose bodies were like tender mango leaves, accorded to them a feast from the smile of joy on their red soft lips, opening from their coral mouths in faces with carp-like dark eyes stretching to their beautiful ears.

Evening¹ also provided capital amusement to these warriors in the shape of maidens with faultless faces, shining with beauty-spots (tilaka) of kastūri. Their curly hair and flower-wreaths, where bees still clustered, slipped in their enjoyment and they tidied themselves in front of mirrors.² They then gently withdrew a small well-looking lute from its ornamental case and played on the string twisted over its venerable stem, a pālai-paṇ which was the natural result of taking the kural (basic note) itself as the tonic (kural). Then they played the beautiful kuṛiñci-paṇ in the traditional mode which was the result of taking tuttam (the second note of the scale) as kural.

Evening then departed after pointing out to the people of ancient Vañci celebrated by many, the spreading rays of the rising moon which received the homage of the world, and which resembled the face of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan, whose anklets were kissed by the crowns of vanquished monarchs, when he gave audience to his aggrieved subjects.

1 The poet narrates how Evening acted as host to the guests, viz. the warriors who had come back from their expedition after a well-earned success. The feast consisted of the embraces of the long-separated lovers, and of singing and dancing.

2 See Pari., §21, l. 23; Akam., st. 71. The use of looking-glasses was very common.

Then the lovers and their ladies obeyed the behests of the god of love—the archer using arrows tipped with fine flowers—who held his sway over the moonlit terraces, groves covered with fallen flowers, dancing-halls powdered with (soft) earth, pandals with blooming flowers, white-legged bedsteads and canopied verandas¹ over all of which spread the cool rays of the moon.

In the centre of the ancient city with its rampart walls where flags flew, stood prominently the elegantly decorated sabhā hall of the golden palace,² like Mēru standing in the midst of this vast fruitful sea-girt earth.

To see the beauty of the moon, the chaste and good queen Vēṇmāḷ came, followed on one side by lamp-bearing maidens³ with glittering bangles who uttered benedictions of longevity: and on another side by those who played on mirudaṅkams smeared with mud and on lutes with curved pegs, and by those who sang sweet melodies (paṇ); on one side were dwarfs and hunchbacks who carried the paste of the musk deer and the paste of white sandalwood; and on another side eunuchs in women's clothes carried incense and other fragrances, maidens carried mattresses scattered with flowers, incense and other scents, and maidservants in the approved manner carried mirrors,

1 The general meeting-places of the lovers are given. One feature of such places was the prevalence of cool moonlight.

2 From this we gather that the palace was in the heart of the fortress city of Vañci.

3 The queen's attendants and followers. The paraphernalia consisted of musical instruments, scents, flowers and clothes.

clothes and ornamented vessels. Along with his queen the ruler of the sea-girt earth mounted the beautifully decorated terrace.

Then, a Cākkayan,¹ a dancing expert from Paraiyūr,² which was famous for Brahmanas versed in the four Vēdas, exhibited for the king's pleasure, the dance known as *koṭṭiccētam*³ danced with Umā as part of Himself by the mighty Śiva, while the anklet worn on his beautiful feet tinkled: the big parai borne in his loving and graceful hand sounded: his red eyes expressed a thousand charming suggestions: and his red matted hair tossed in all directions: her pāṭakam did not throb: and yet her sūṭakam was not displaced: her waist-band did not produce any sound: her breasts did not shake; her head jewels

1 The Brahmana as actor and dancer.

2 Even today we have in Malabar a professional class of dancers and musicians who go by the the name of Śākkiyar. Mr T. K. Gopala Panikkar in his Malabar and its Folk (pp. 184-5), gives interesting details of the dress and the methods of these modern Śākkiyars assisted by the Nambiyārs who play the musical instruments. According to the Divākaram they were the Vaḷḷuvārs or private secretaries to the kings, and the Kūttāśśākkiyars were a section of the Śākkiyars and were perhaps peculiar to the ancient malaināṭu (see Śen Tamil, Vol. VII, No. 1). But an epigraph of Rājendra Cōla I (V. Rangachari's Inscriptions of the Madras Presidency, Vol. III, Trichinopoly, No. 824) records in his twenty-ninth year (A.D. 1041), 'a gift of land by the great assembly of Kamaravallī Caturvēṭi-magalam to Śākkai Mārayam Vīkramacōlan for performing the dance (śākkai-kūttu) thrice on each of the festivals Mārkaṭi-tīruvāṭirai and Vaikaṣi-tīruvāṭirai.' This shows that Cākkai-kūttu was a living institution in the medieval period of the heyday of the Cōla empire.

3 A kind of dance sacred to Śiva also known as koṭukōṭṭi or merely koṭṭi. Here Śiva is said to have danced with Umā on one side, that is, in Ardhanārīśvara form.

were not disturbed: and her sleek curls did not get loosened.

When he had finished praising the ruler of the vast world, the latter went to the hall of audience¹ and bade enter the Brahmana Mātalan, Nilan, and other kañcukins, when the gate-keeper informed him of their arrival. Making obeisance to the king through the palace-officials,² Nilan reported: 'O king with the tumpai and the anklet, tokens of success in battle! Attended by these vanquished Arya kings we went to the ancient city of Cempiyan (Cōla) and paid our respects to him through his officers.'³ Seated in the ornamented maṇṭapam constructed (with the materials received as gifts) from the Vaccira (Vajra,) Avanti and Magada kings,⁴ he remarked to the commander

1 The term used in the text for the hall of audience is vettliyan maṇṭapam—literally the hall where the king sat to give audience to visitors and others. It is also known as olakkamaṇṭapam, and perōlakkamaṇṭapam. See Studies in Tamil Literature and History, p. 18. n.

2 Here we are introduced to another detail of Tamil polity. Officials or non-officials who wished to have interviews with the king spoke to the gatekeeper who in his turn informed the king and with the latter's permission they were admitted to the royal presence. There were certain officials, perhaps of the nature of modern private secretaries, in the palace whose duty it was to introduce visitors to His Majesty.

3 The term tamar has been rendered as 'officers'. It appears that visitors to a king in Tamil India were taken to his presence by special officials who, we have to infer, were appointed for the purpose of welcoming them and introducing them to His Majesty. The commentator explains śankōcaparivāram as probably meaning private officials who had nothing to do with administration.

4 This presupposes a Cōla expedition to north India, sometime before the one undertaken by Ceṅkuṭṭuvan.

of his chariot corps¹ occupying the front rank of the army :
 “It is no achievement to capture in the wide expanse of the battlefield those who, after displaying great military prowess, gave up their umbrellas and swords and fled in the disguise of non-combatants.”²

‘When we took leave of the magnanimous Cōla monarch with his breast adorned with a glowing garland, O lord of the righteous sceptre, we went to see the king of Madura of resounding fame. The Pāṇṭyan³ of the mighty spear said : “This is a strange kind of victory indeed, gained by the display of exceeding passion and anger against monarchs who had abandoned the battlefield to the enemy and adopted the garb of ascetics. It is all the more strange when Ceṅkuṭṭuvan had decided to use the shaft of the far-famed white umbrella placed by the Aryan kings on the huge nape of their elephants as a *talaikkōl*⁴ (a dancer’s rod) signifying Jayanta, and to worship Śiva with His consort Umā at his side at Kuyilāluvam⁵ on a part of the Himalayan slopes.”

1 From the term talaittēr, it can be inferred that the poet has in his mind the traditional reckoning of the army as ratha, gaja, turaga, and pada. Here ratha occupies the place of honour.

2 According to the Cōla king, the Cēra king’s action smacked of unrighteous warfare.

3 The Pāṇṭyan’s view of the capture of prisoners by Ceṅkuṭṭuvan. To him also the action of the Cēra did not commend itself.

4 The talaikkōl was invariably the shaft of the enemy’s umbrella seized in war.

5 A place of worship in the Himalayas sacred to Śiva. The learned editor invites our attention to one Kuyilālapuram, mentioned in a commentary on the Jain work Nilakēśi, as one of the places of the Buddha’s advent. It has been suggested that the scene of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan’s battle lay in the north at Kōśala. See

When Nilan reported the disparaging remarks of these two monarchs Ceṅkuṭṭuvan laughed with scorn while his lotus-like red eyes sparkled like fire. (Noticing this change), Māṭalan, of undiminished learning, rose up and said :

‘O king of kings, may your valour live for ever ! May you also live long ! After destroying Viyalūr¹ famous for neytal in small bunches, where elephant sleep in the mountains dense with pepper plants, you won a decisive victory at Nērivāyil² over nine kings wearing atti garlands; camping on the outskirts of Iṭumpil³ with your army of lofty chariots, you fought a fierce battle on the sea pursuing the enemy for a long distance;⁴ you discomfited the Arya monarchs who advanced on the banks of the great Ganges with its heavy torrents.

‘O king, wearing a long garland of victory and possessing a huge army ! O lion of kings, who knows all that can be known from great men, dismiss your wrath ! Ruler of the earth, may the days you have yet to live become more numerous than the particles of sand in the cool river Āṇ-porunai !⁵

T. G. Aravamutham, The Kāveri, the Maikharis and the Sangam Age, p. 40.

1 Viyalūr is noted for pepper and elephants. It is also called Viyalūr and may be located somewhere in Kaṭaṇmalaināṭu and was once under Nannan Vēṇmāḷ (Akam., st. 97).

2 The battle of Nērivāyil : see Cīla., canto xxvii, l. 117 ff. It was a place to the south of Uraiyyūr.

3 See Patirru., Fifth Ten, patikam. This is Iṭumbāṭavanam, a village near Tirutturaippūṇṭi, Tanjore Dt. It is interesting that the Tēvāram should refer to this place.

4 Here is evidence of a naval expedition. Unfortunately we have no details.

5 This is modern Amarāvati. See Puṇam., st. 11, 36 etc.

‘Ruler of the earth encircled by the deep sea, may you live long! Pray do not dismiss my words. Listen. Even after passing through fifty years of your protection¹ on this earth you do not perform religious sacrifice² but continue to perform the sacrifice of battle. O king, who carried out your vow with a sword in your right hand and with a garland of palmyra! Among your ancestors in this city one king distinguished himself by destroying the kaṭampu of the seas;³ another exhibited great prowess by carving the bow-emblem on the Himalayas;⁴ another enabled a Vedic Brahmana in return for composing some poems, to ascend (bodily) to the higher world;⁵ another commanded messengers of Death not to take away lives indiscriminately but only in a particular order; another Cera penetrated the golden region of the high mountain in the fertile kingdom of the barbarous Yavanas.⁶

1 This shows that either Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was aged fifty at the time of his return to Vañci from his northern expedition; or it was fifty years since he had assumed the reins of government. The text admits of both interpretations and possibly the latter is more likely.

2 This instance of religious sacrifice and Ceṅkuṭṭuvan's ready approval bears out unmistakably that the king was a true follower of the established religion of the land represented by the Veda.

3 Patirru., st. 2, ll. 12, etc.

4 Further evidence of an earlier expedition to north India.

5 The reference is to Pālai Kautamaṇār. See Patirru., Third Ten, paṭikam. Also Cila., canto xxii, p. 63 ff., note. Palyāṇaiceel-keḷukuṭṭuvan is under reference.

6 The Yavana country must have been somewhere in the Indus region. It is worthy of note that the learned author characterizes them as men of barbarous words. According to the Sanskritists they spoke the mleccha tongue. Their kingdom is Yet another Cēra had the might to assail the hill fortress (akappa) of an enemy after driving him away with his great army from the dire battlefield; another in that illustrious line of kings bathed in the Ayirai¹ river and in the waters brought from the two seas;² another brought the *Catukkappūtam*³ unto Vañci and offered it the sacrifice of liquor; none of these escaped the clutches of death. You know well that this body is not stable. Did you not see in your battle with the Arya kings, who insulted the audacious Tamils of conquering prowess, that wealth⁴ will not abide for all time with the men living in this fertile world?

O just king, it is not necessary to point out to men of wisdom that youth will not last for ever.⁵ O protecting king, the goddess of wealth abides in your breast, for you see your own body covered with grey hairs. Even good souls in divine bodies may, it is just possible, enter human frames on earth. O honoured king, the souls of mentioned among the northern countries in the Brahmāṇṣa Purāṇa, ch. 16.

1 Patirru., st. 3, 10, 79, 88-90. Ponnāni is the modern name. See Pandit R. Raghava Aiyangar's Vañcimānakar, p. 52 ff. The river takes its source from Ayiraimalai or Aivaramalai in the Anamalais, Coimbatore District.

2 The two seas under reference are the eastern and western seas. In other words his sway extended from coast to coast.

3 Catukkam is from the Sanskrit term Catuskam. It was a feature of ancient cities. See, for example, the description of Lankā in the Rāmāyaṇa, 'Sundara', ch. 53, st. 26.

4 The author's view of wealth is explained in Sanskrit by two pregnant words cala and cañcala.

5 By past karmā a god may be born as a man, a man as an animal, and an animal as a hellish being or vice versa.

those who are born as men now may perchance be reborn as animals. Souls which cast off the bodies of animals may, it is possible, find a place in the afflicted bodies of hellish beings.¹ Men are but actors on a stage, and will have no enduring embodiment in only one fixed form.² That life after death will depend upon deeds³ done in a previous birth is a significant statement which is not untrue. O king decorated with a garland of seven crowns⁴ on your breast, may the discus which you hold accumulate more and more repute for your line!

‘O king of the powerful sword! I have chosen (to voice all this) not to solicit rare gifts from you. I cannot suffer to see a good soul wrapped within a good body travel the path trodden by the common people of this vast world. O king who has crossed the limits of learning!⁵ You should therefore do that great and fruitful yajña (sacrifice which Vedic scriptures ordain for a Kṣatriya king) with the help of sacrificial priests learned in the four Vēdas, in order that you may gain that (superior) path which gods extol.⁶

1 Here is the philosophic view of life. The author is against postponing things to the morrow.

2 See Maṇi., canto xii, ll. 51-2

3 Ibid., canto vi, ll. 158-9. Belief in karmā and rebirth.

4 Cf. Paṭirru., st. 14, 16, 45 comm.

5 Evidence which shows that Ceṅkuṭṭuvan was highly learned as befitted a Kṣatriya monarch. By the fact that he consented to do the yajña, it is clear that he was a member of the Kṣatriya community. If it had not been so, the Brahmana Māṭalaṅ would not have insisted on this, which was the Kṣatriya king's birthright.

6 The implication is that the king must perform the Rajanya.

'If you say that a good deed can be done tomorrow,¹ it may chance that your good soul trained in Vedic lore will leave your body even today. In the whole of this sea-girt world there is not one who knows how long he is to live. May you with this your wedded queen² live ever worshipped by monarchs wearing anklets of submission who fall at your feet! May our eminent king live long protecting the world from aeon to aeon !'

When the learned tongue of the Vedic Brahmana thus ploughed and sowed seeds³ of divine wisdom in the king's ears, those seeds sprouted forth in right time. With a desire to enjoy the fruits of the harvest of virtue, the king with the resounding anklets, commanded the presence of those sacrificial priests who had completed their studies by listening to teachers belonging to a group of traditional interpreters of the four Vēdas. They were asked to commence the festival of sacrificial rituals in the manner instructed by Mātalaṇ.

Then he ordered the release of the Arya kings from prison and had them taken outside the ancient city of Vañci of exceeding renown, to the mansion of Vajāvikkō, surrounded by pools of water and cool flower-groves. They were told that they might return to their own cities on the day following the end of the religious sacrifice. He had then the pleasure of saying: 'Villavaṅkōtai! Look to their comforts as befits their royalty.' Orders were issued to Aḷumbilvāḷ and also to āyakkāṇakkar:¹ 'Let all prisons² be vacated and cleaned, let all taxes due from the citizens of our kingdom be remitted.'

1 Cf. Araneri, st. 67.

2 That the queen's presence was indispensable for the religious sacrifice is emphasized, the dharmapatnī of Sanskrit literature.

3 The reference here is to the prescriptions of the Śrauta-sūtra.

Evidencing the example of the Cōḷa king wearing the atti garland, Pattinī worshipped and prayed to by all the earth, exhibited the truth of the good old Tamil saying that the chastity of virtuous women would not be meritorious if the valiant monarch did not rule properly³ and made him (the Cōḷa) realize it; again she made the Pāṇṭyan,⁴ the guardian of the southern regions, realize that the king would not live if his sceptre swerved from justice. Further the Cēra⁵ king of the western regions was made to feel that the wrath incurred by (true) monarchs would not be appeased till their sworn vows were fulfilled so as to be known to the kings of the northern regions. Pattinī who in raging fury had raised flames from one of her breasts and devastated the ancient city of Madura, entered our country and stood in the fresh golden

1 Officials of the State, probably connected with the Department of Accounts, especially the Revenue Department.

2 See above, canto xxiii, ll. 126-7. Cf. Maṇi., canto xix, l. 161. Jivaka., canto l. 2372.

3 Cf. Maṇi., canto xxii, ll. 208-9. Kuraḷvenpā 543, comm. by Parimēlaḷakar. The implication is that because the Cōḷa king did not reign properly, Kōvalaṇ left his wedded wife for a courtesan, and after wasting all his wealth, he had to abandon his native place for an alien country to seek a livelihood.

4 The implication here is that the Pāṇṭyan king did not make the necessary preliminary inquiry before administering justice as evidenced by his execution of Kōvalaṇ on the mere testimony of his goldsmith.

5 The implication in the case of the Cēra is that no Kṣatriya should take an insult from another Kṣatriya lying down. He should squarely face the situation.

shade of the cool vēṅkai branches. To that venerable lady was dedicated, by the united aid of the dharmaic Brahmanas, purōhitas, astrologers, and expert sculptors,¹ a shrine (Pattinikkōṭṭam), constructed in all its parts according to the prescribed rules² so that it might win the approval of the wise. Therein was planted the image of Pattini, carved³ with expert handiwork upon the stone brought from the Himalayan slopes, the residences of gods, after prayers to the god (Śiva) on the top of those hills. (The deity) was decorated with choice ornaments of exquisite workmanship, and worshipped with flower offerings. At the temple entrance were stationed (images of) the guardian deities.⁴ The lion of kings who brought all north India under his control thus performed the ceremony of consecration (kaṭavuṇ-maṅkalam) and commanded the conduct of worship from day to day by sacrificial offerings and other festivities.

1 The śilpīns or the sculptors were there to build the temple according to the Śilpaśāstra.

2 These rules are largely found in the treatises known as the Āgamas. It may be that the Āgama school had come to stay even before the commencement of the Christian era. See P. T. Srinivasa Iyengar, History of the Tamils, pp. 87-8.

3 This is evidence that Sanskrit works on the Śilpaśāstra had come into popular usage in the Tamil land.

4 These are called dik-pālas and dvāra-pālas in Sanskrit literature.

CANTO XXIX

VALTTUK KATAI

OR

THE BLESSING

PREFATORY¹

HAVING defeated the Koṅkus in a fierce battle and journeyed to the banks of the great Ganges, Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ—son of Cēralātaṇ who alone ruled all the earth from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas,² and of the daughter of the Cōḷa of the illustrious solar race—remained at Vañci in a wrathful mood. At that time several saints of the north came there, and reported to him that the northern kings who had gathered together on the occasion of the marriage³ of a certain princess unanimously derided the prowess of the kings of the southern Tamil regions, who had once opened war on them and carved on the Himalayan slopes their distinctive emblems of bow, fish and tiger. In disparagement they said: 'Perhaps there were then no crowned kings here as powerful as ourselves.' Like a wheel that has been set revolving by a stick, the decision to take a stone from the Himalayan slopes for the image (of Kaṇṇaki), received confirmation as it enabled Ceṅkuṭ-

1 Here is a summary in prose of the gist of the whole story. With the closing of the last canto ending with maṅkalam, the drama comes to an end. Cantos xxix and xxx read like the Uttara-kāṇṭham of Vālmiki's Rāmāyaṇa.

2 See Patirru., st. 43.

3 Svayamvaram or selection of a husband by the bride was a common form of marriage among the ancient Kṣatriyas.

tuvaṇ to vanquish the kings of Aryavarta. When he had accomplished this he stayed for some time on the banks of the Ganges as an honoured guest, but he made some of them bear the Himalayan Śilā-deity¹ on their crowned heads after bathing it, according to tradition, in the holy Ganges. Thus he appeased his exceeding indignation. He entered the city of Vañci and enshrined with ceremonious consecration the idol of Kaṇṇaki, whose breast was responsible for a revolution, in a temple which was worshipped by many crowned kings of the earth offering tributes.

Soon after this, Mācāttuvāṇ² became an ascetic, having heard from the gracious Brahmana an account of the inconsolable mourning of Kaṇṇaki, who had shed tears from the carp-like eyes in her moon-like face, and whose dark dusty tresses had fallen over her back as she condemned the God of Righteousness for the injustice done to Kōvalaṇ resulting in his death at the hands of a detestable person; whereupon she had stood with flowing tears before the king, who died of his unjust act. His aged wife too gave up her life.

On hearing this (account) the nurse, the chief maid, and Dēvanti³ who had sought refuge with the deity Cāttan, became sorely vexed and went together to see Kaṇṇaki in the great city of Madura, and there heard of the havoc caused by her cast-off breast. They then repaired to the cowherdess Aiyai, the daughter of Mātari, who ceased to live after the loss of her refugee; and all of them took the

1 The term in the text is apaṇku.

2 Cf. Maṇi, canto xxviii, l. 73.

3 News spread to Pukār of the disaster which had overtaken Kaṇṇaki and her husband. Dēvanti, Kaṇṇaki's nurse, and the maid then left for Madura to see their distressed friend.

route along the Vaikai, and ascending the lofty hill,¹ entered the palace of king Ceṅkuṭṭuvan who had enshrined the Lady of Chastity, and addressed him on their relationship (to Kaṇṇaki) thus :²

SPEECH OF DĒVANTI

‘Know me ! I am the companion of that deity protected by the three crowned kings, who was born in the northern Himalayas³ and bathed in the swift flowing tide of the Ganges, and whose shoulders are adorned with bangles. Know me as the companion of the lady of the Cōln country.’

SPEECH OF THE NURSE

‘Know me as the nurse of the lady with long eyes, who did not show her anger towards the modest and fair Mātavi⁴ but who went clasping her beloved husband’s hand to the dreadful forest where even a potful of water could not be found in the wells. Please know that I am the foster-mother of the lady of cool Pukār.’

1 The hills under reference may perhaps be the Paṇi hills near modern Diṇṭigul. Paṇi is still an important place of pilgrimage to Malayali Hindus.

2 The three who left Pukār for Madura saw Ceṅkuṭṭuvan and each spoke to him about the greatness of their friend.

3 The stone for the image was taken from the Himalayas. According to Vāstu literature images were also made of earth and wood. But by the time of the Cilappatikāram, śila or stone must have taken their place.

4 As Kaṇṇaki’s difficulties were indirectly due to Mātavi, it would have been natural for her to be angry. But Kaṇṇaki’s righteous temperament did not allow her to do more than consider how resistless are the decrees of fate.

SPEECH OF THE CHIEF MAID¹

‘Know me as the companion of the lady with the golden bangles who had nothing to say to the mother who gave her birth, nor even a word for the nurse who brought her up, nor for me either, but followed her husband remembering only her duty as a true wife.² Know me, a companion of the lady of Pūmpukār.’

LAMENTATION OF DĒVANTI³

‘I have done no penance. I did not realize the implication of your bad dream on the day I heard it. O, what have I done? On the day when your mother heard of the havoc caused by your cast-off breast, O lady with the beautiful tresses of hair, she died of grief. O, did you hear, friend, your mother-in-law also died? O, did you hear that, friend?’

LAMENTATION OF THE NURSE

‘Mācāttuvān heard of the harm done to Kōvalan by that wretched man, and the consequent death of the protecting king. Losing heart, he preferred death to life and after making several gifts he took to asceticism.⁴ Did you hear that, mother? O, did you also hear, mother, of the renunciation of Mānāikan?’

THE CHIEF MAID'S LAMENTATION

‘Mānavi heard of the death of your beloved and of the extreme suffering to you, the lover, and of the crying

1 Aṭittol is, according to the grammatical treatise Tolkappiyam, the daughter of a nurse who serves as the companion and maid of the daughter of the house.

2 See above, canto xv, ll. 143-4.

3 All the three now address the image of Kaṇṇaki,

4 Mācāttuvān and Mānāikan took to an ascetic life. Life as householders had no more charm for them.

for shame by common folk, and lost heart. She went to the holy saints living under the bōdi tree,¹ gave away in charity all her wealth, and became a nun. O companion, did you hear that? O companion, did you also hear of the renunciation of Maṇimēkalai?

LAMENTATION OF DĒVANTI POINTING TO AIYAI²

‘This unmarried girl is the daughter of the old lady³ who gave up her life saying: “I enter the fire. I was not able to protect the refugee entrusted to me by her (Kavunti) of doubt-free vision.” Do you see, friend, Aiyai of the lovely teeth? Do you see, friend, this fair daughter of your aunt?’⁴

CENKUṬṬUVAN SPEAKS

‘What, what is this? O, what is this? What is this? O! I see in the sky the marvellous sight of a lightning-like figure with golden anklets,⁵ waist-band, bangles on her arms, golden ear-rings set with excellent diamonds and other ornaments of superior gold.’

Kaṇṇaki showed her divine form to Cenkuṭṭuvan and exclaimed:

1 The term bōdi tree is significant as it proves that both Mātavi and her daughter Maṇimēkalai became Buddhist bikṣunīs or nuns.

2 Dēvanti now addresses Aiyai who followed her and companions from Madura to the sacred hill.

3 The term Avvai or Auvai here is one of respect.

4 Māma and Māmi (uncle and aunt) are terms still generally used by Tamilians today when addressing elderly men and women. This form of address has thus been the custom from ancient times.

5 Kaṇṇaki was seen by Cenkuṭṭuvan in the air in the form of a goddess.

'The Pāṇṭyan is blameless. He is now a good guest in the palace of the king of gods. I am his daughter.¹ I am going to sport on the hill of Veṇṇelāṇ (Skanda); friends, please come with me there, all of you.'

SPEECH OF THE MAIDENS OF VAṆCI²

'Maidens of Vaṇci, O maids with waists like vaṇci-creepers, O maids whose feet are dyed with lac, who form the retinue of the conquering monarch, all of you, come !

'Come, all of you, and sing about her who devastated the city of Kūṭal with her breast and discomfited the king with her anklet. Let us all sing about the daughter of Tennavan. She came to our country whose king spoke these words of praise: "Pāṇṭyan monarchs would not live if their just sceptre deviated from its path."

'About that beautiful damsel all of us shall sing. Come along, all of you, we shall sing about the Pāṇṭyan's daughter.'

THE SPEECH OF THE GROUPS OF MAIDS

'We said that she was our king's daughter. She said that she was the creeper-like daughter of the king of the 1 Here Kaṇṇaki calls herself the daughter of the Pāṇṭyan king. As the latter was the cause of her transformation into a goddess she claims the Pāṇṭyan as her father. The Veṇṇelāṇ hill cannot be Ceṇkōṭu as the commentator has it. Nor can it be Ceṇkunṅam, if Vaṇci is to be identified with karūr in Coimbatore district. This hill is also known to the Caṅkam classic, Kalittokai (st. 27). But it is difficult to venture a conjecture as to its identification. Probably the reference is to the chain of Palṇi hills (see R. Raghava Aiyangar's Vaṇcimānakar, p. 128).

2 Group worship by the people of Vaṇci.

Vaikai.¹ We shall praise the Vānavan (Cēra). Let the gods praise the king of the Vaikai.'

PRAISE (AND BLESSING)

'Long live the king who surrendered his life² to the tears of the sorrow-stricken maiden prompted by pre-ordained fate !

'Long live the old dynasty³ of kings reigning over the people of Madura encircled by the constantly flooding Vaikai ! Live long!

'Long live the king⁴ who made the tall-crowned monarchs of northern regions bear on their heads the (stone) image yielded by the king of mountains (the Himalayas) !

'Long live the king and his ancient⁵ dynasty at Vañci encircled by the Ān-porunai in continual floods ! Live long !

'All of us shall sing to the king of the Kāvēri regions.⁶ Let us sing of Pukār, O girls with flower-decked tresses !'

1 This is in accordance with Kaṇṇaki's own claim to be the daughter of the Pāṇṭyan.

2 As has already been shown this points to the high sense of justice that actuated the Pāṇṭyan monarch. The king here stands euphemistically for the king's line.

3 This shows that the Pāṇṭyan dynasty had a much more ancient history than we would ordinarily imagine.

4 This is in praise of Ceṅkuṭṭuvan who made Vijaya and Kaṇaka carry the stone intended for the image.

5 The reference is to king Neṭuñceliyan.

6 It is worthy of note that each of these three Tamil kings lived on the banks of a river. The Ān-porunai for the Cēra, the Kāvēri for the Cōla, and the Vaikai for the Pāṇṭya show the truth

AMMĀNAI SONG¹

‘O Ammānai! who is that strong man who reigned over the sea-girt world and guarded the tall fortress of the king of gods? That powerful person who guarded the tall fortress, O Ammānai, know to be the Cōla king who pulled down the three fortresses suspended from the heavens. O Ammānai, sing of Pukār, the capital of the Cōla!

‘O Ammānai, who is the conquering king² praised in heaven for weighing himself and offering flesh from his own body, for the sake of a dove? That king who cut off his flesh, O Ammānai, was the king³ to whom (on a previous occasion) a cow appealed for justice. O Ammānai, we shall sing of Pūmpukār, that king’s capital!

‘O Ammānai, who was he that planted the emblem of the strong tiger on the northern Himalayas when the elephants at the eight cardinal points⁴ looked on with unwinking eyes? O Ammānai, he who carved his tiger-emblem on the northern Himalayas was the conquering monarch who of the theory that ancient kingdoms and civilizations rose and flourished on important river beds. It bears out the antiquity of Tamil culture also.

1 This section of the Ammānai song, consisting of three stanzas of five lines and one stanza of six lines, is sung in praise of the Cōla monarch who had his capital in Pukār. Ammānai is a wooden ball. The game of ammānai is still current among the womenfolk of the Tamil land.

2 The reference is to Śibi Cakravartī.

3 The allusion is to Manunitikaṇṭha Cōlaṇ.

4 Aṣṭādiggajas in Sanskrit Literature. Legend has it that the universe lies balanced on the tusks of elephants, each elephant supporting a quarter of the world. Here it alludes to the extensive conquests of the king.

with grace brought all the eight directions under one umbrella. Let us sing, O Ammānai, of Pūmpukar of that king.

‘O Ammānai, what is the object of the maidens with handsome ornaments, singing in their homes holding wooden balls in their hands? The object of singing (thus) in their houses is, O Ammānai, that their garlanded king should embrace their full-grown and alluring breasts. If our king so embraces such full-grown and alluring breasts, we will sing of the romantic city of Pukar, O Ammānai!’

THE (KANTUKA) BALL SONG¹

‘O girl shining like a golden creeper! With golden necklaces glittering and in harmony with the repeated tinkling of our lightning-like girdles, let us run in all directions and strike the rebounding ball saying: “Long live the Pāṇṭyan, long live he.” Let us strike the ball saying: “Long live he who wears Indra’s garland on his chest.”’

‘Let us go, come, sit and move about in front, behind and everywhere, as if the lustrous creeper-like lightning of the sky had descended to the earth. Let us run and strike the rebounding ball saying: “Long live the Pāṇṭyan, long live he.” Let us strike the ball saying: “Long live he who wears Indra’s garland on his chest.”’

‘The rebounding ball did not stay in our palms: nor did it rise up heavenward leaving the vast earth. Let us go and strike the ball, saying: “Long live the Pāṇṭyan, long live he.” Let us strike the ball saying: “Long live he who wears Indra’s garland on his chest.”’

1 This section of Kantukavarī (or play with balls), consists of three stanzas of four lines. Each is sung in praise of the Pāṇṭyan king reigning at Mādura.

THE (UCAL) SWINGING SONG¹

'Seated on the ornamental swing suspended by ropes, let one of us standing close to Aiyai stretch out her hands and beating the single time-beat, sing of our king who first destroyed the kaṭampu. Shall we not swing ourselves in the swing rolling our palm-like oval eyes? Shall we not swing ourselves in the swing singing about the carving of the cruel bow?

'Singing about the heroism and valour of the mountain king Poraiyan, our Cēra, who ungrudgingly gave immense quantities of food² in the war fought between the five (Pāṇṭavas) and the hundred (Kauravas), shall we not swing in the swing causing our cloud-like tresses to wave? Shall we not thus swing singing about the way in which the kaṭampu was destroyed?

'Shall we sing to the glory of our king, the lord of men, who protects the earth as far as Cape Comorin, abounding in heavy large stones, with his bow, fish and tiger flags, including the fertile country of the Yavanas of barbarous speech?³ Shall we not swing in the swing bending our lightning-like waists? Shall we not sing of the prowess of him who carved the bow-emblem?'

1 This section of Ucalvari, consisting of three stanzas of five lines each, is in praise of the Cēra king reigning at Vañci.

2 See above, canto xxiii, l. 55; cf. Puram., st. 2.

3 Another reference to the extensive conquests of the Cēra king. He was not only the overlord of the Tamil kingdom but carried conquests to the very north, including the Yavana country. For the Yavans, see Patirru., second patikam. It is interesting to note that the Yavanas spoke a harsh tongue.

VAḷLAIPPĀṬṬU OR THE PESTLE SONG¹

The maidens of Pukār² gathered together under the shade of the flowering kāñci tree to pound valuable pearls (as rice) using sweet sugarcane as their pestles, singing in praise of Cempiyan's strong chariot and his discus ensign and his garlanded shoulders wide and broad. That alone is song. That song alone is the song which is sung by these damsels (of Pukār).

The damsels of lofty-towered Madura³ pound with coral pestles, pearls celebrated by poets, singing in praise of the fish-emblem of the Pañcavan⁴ whose shoulders shine with the garland of the king of the gods. That alone is song. That song alone is the song which eulogizes the margosa garland of the Pāṇṭyan.

The damsels of Vañci⁵ who pound priceless pearls with pestles of white ivory in sandalwood mortars, sing of the worldwide fame of the garlanded Cēra for the destruction of the kaṭampu after crossing the waves. That alone is song. That song alone is the song in praise of the palmyra garland, which enraptures the heart.

Now, it is difficult for those who do not worship the auspicious feet of Poraiyan⁶ of the great bow, to bless our lord of the great earth. Our king's illustrious daughter (Kaṇṇakī) spoke benedictory words: 'May our Ceṇkuṭṭuvan live long.'⁷

1 This section is praise to all the three principal Tamil Kingdoms, the Cōla, the Pāṇṭya, and the Cēra.

2 Pukār was noted for sugarcane and corals of great value.

3 Madura was noted for superior pearls and coral.

4 Pañcavan is another term for the Pāṇṭyan.

5 Vañci was noted for elephants, sandalwood and also pearls. Thus all the ancient Tamil kingdoms were rich in pearls.

6 Poraiyan is another term for the Cēra.

7 The section appropriately ends with Kaṇṇakī giving her blessing to Ceṇkuṭṭuvan.

CANTO XXX

VARANTARU KATAI

OR

THE BOON

THE great king who had subdued the north saw with his own eyes the divine form of Kaṇṇaki. He looked well at Dēvantikai and asked her: 'Who is that Maṇimēkalai for whom you cried out your heart? What were the grounds for her renunciation? Please tell me that.'

Dēvantikai blessed the king: 'May the king's fame grow without diminution! May the country shower plenty!' She then narrated to him the great renunciation¹ of Maṇimēkalai, celebrated among the group of dancers with handsome waist ornaments. She began by saying that her dark tresses had grown in luxuriance so as to be divided into (the usual) five plaits, and her cool eyes delightfully red in the corners had acquired a new charm of which she was unconscious. (Continuing her description of Maṇimēkalai she said:) Within her tender coral lips, her pearl-like teeth were not fully grown; her lovely breasts had developed; her bosom had broadened; her slender waist became narrower and her pretty alkul had widened; her two thighs were rounded; her shapely tender feet, unable even to bear (the weight) of ornaments, became glossy to the view. Yet men of noble families did not recognize her as a professional dancer because the dancing master had not initiated her into that art.

¹ Maṇimēkalai, the lovely daughter of the courtesan Mātavi and Kōvalan, renounced her worldly life at an impressionable age, and overcame all temptations. She performed such miraculous works as inspired the poet Cāttaṇār to compose an epic recording her life and career.

‘At that time Mātavi’s good mother¹ asked her daughter: “What is your intention? What am I to do?” Then Mātavi called Maṇimēkalai to her, saying: “Come here, my dear modest daughter,” and removed her locks² with the flower-wreaths thereon, thus making the bodiless god fling to the bare ground his flower dart and his bow of sugarcane. She was admitted to the Buddhist Sangha to follow their dharma.

‘When the king and his citizens heard this they felt as sorry as one who had dropped a priceless gem into the deep sea. The well-spoken saint³ said very kindly: “The lovely girl expressed to me her wish for renunciation.” Because that fair maiden changed her fair appearance despite her youthful age, I lamented.’

After speaking thus to the king, Dēvantikai became god-possessed,⁴ and the flower wreaths on her locks fell loose behind her; her brows began to quiver; her coral lips shut to; her white teeth were set in a strange smile; her words were not normal; her lovely face perspired;

1 The name of Mātavi’s mother was Citrāpatī. See reproached Mātavi for having failed in her duty of initiating Maṇimēkalai into the art of dancing.

2 The Buddhist bhikṣuṇī was expected to cast off all her adornments and shave her head. See above, canto xxvii, ll. 107-8.

3 The saint under reference is Aravaṇa Aṭikai. See S. K. Aiyangar’s Maṇimēkalai in its Historical Setting, pp. 221-30.

4 It was the god Cāttaṇ who entered into the person of Dēvantikai and served as the medium between the god and man.

her fair eyes reddened and her hands were lifted up in a threatening manner. Then she moved her legs and rose from her seat. Unrecognized by many was her understanding. She was in a state of bewilderment. With parched tongue she spoke inspired words before the king of the blossoming kurīñci region.

‘Among the modest, good, and beautiful womenfolk who have come here to see the installation of this goddess, there are the twin girls born to the handsome wife of Araṭṭan Ceṭṭi, as also the little daughter of Cēṭak-kuṭumpi,¹ engaged in the service of the Lord reposing upon the Divine Serpent in the Golden Temple (Āṭaka-māṭam). Near the temple of Maṅkalā-Dēvi² there is a sky-high hill on the red crests of which stands a big bow-like rock with many pools. From their midst issues forth water, with white stones like small mustard seeds, and red stones resembling murukku flowers which seem like dissolved rice flour.

‘As those who bathe in those pools will gather knowledge of their past births, I³ brought that water and handed it over to you, O Brahmana Māṭalan, when you were sitting at the portal of that temple and said: “Receive this. It is meant that you should preserve it. Are you not keeping it in that pot within your string-bag (uri) in your hand?' As that water will not lose its divine quality so long as the sun and the moon exist, if you now sprinkle it upon these three little girls you will find them remembering their past births. Know me to be Pāsaṇṭaṇ¹, appearing within the person of this Brahmana lady.'"

1 A member of the Arcaka community.

2 Dr Swaminatha Aiyar in a note says that the allusion is to Kaṇṇaki. Pandit Raghava Aiyangar examines this and locates the place as the Durgā temple in the village Mangalam, some nine miles to the north-west of Viṇuddāchalam (Cēraṇ Ceṇkuṭṭuvan, p. 8, n. 2). It is interesting to note the name Maṅkalādēvi-amman occurring in an epigraph (Ep. Rep. 420 of 1907) to whom the king of Kērala assigns certain lands as gifts.

3 I, referred to above, stands for Īcāṭṭan.

At this Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ was lost in wonder, and turned towards Mātalaṇ when he said with good cheer: 'Hear this, O king! Let all your ills disappear. Lady Mālati once offered milk to the child of her co-wife when fate pursued her and death cut short its life. Mourning inconsolably, and utterly downcast for the child, she prostrated herself, asking for grace, before Pāsaṇṭaṇ (Cāttaṇ) who came to her in the form of her child² and said: "Mother, give up your great grief" and removed her affliction. He who performed this miracle (Cāttaṇ), grew up well tended under the fostering care of his mother (Mālati) and her co-wife in the ancient family of the Kāppiyas.³ He then married Dēvantikai by going round the fire. And after living with her for eight years, he showed her his

1 See above, canto ix, l. 15, where the term pāsaṇṭaccāttaṇ occurs. In the light of this passage it is reasonable to assume that the word Pāsaṇṭaṇ stands for the god Cāttaṇ.

2 The account smacks of mythology. It is said that God Himself came to Mālati in the form of her deceased child, grew up in her house, was married, and after a brief period as a householder, returned to His shrine.

3 Dr Swaminatha Aiyar identifies Kāppiyakkuṭi with a village south-east of Shiyāḷi. Pandit M. Raghava Aiyangar is of opinion that the reference is to the family of Kāppiyas, perhaps Kāvyagōtra. If the latter construction be accepted, we are reminded of the grammatical treatise Tolkāppiyam whose author was evidently a Kāppiyaṇār, a member of the family or gōtra of that name.

youthful divine form and disappearing said: "Come to my temple."¹

'When I was in the temple of Maṅkalā-Dēvi, this god appeared before me in the form of a Brahmana and gave me this string-bag with the pot in it and asking me to keep it safe, went away. But he never appeared before me again. I took it away with me. Just now, the All-Wise appeared in the person of the Brahmana lady and said to me: "Sprinkle that water." O king, let us, therefore, sprinkle it over these damsels and know the truth.'

When he had thus sprinkled it, the knowledge of their previous births rose up in their minds and (the mother of Kaṇṇaki) began to sob thus:² 'O my daughter, O my helpmate! Without even caring for me who sympathized with you because your celebrated husband misbehaved towards you, you went to an alien city alone but for the company of your husband, and suffered exceeding trouble. O my dearest! Will you not come and relieve me of my great sorrow?'

Another (the mother of Kōvalan) said.³ 'O, you be-took yourself away in the dead of night alone and in misery, with my good daughter-in-law staying with me. Grieving over your departure, I began to rave. I can no more endure this. Will you not come to me, my son?'

The third (Mātari) said:⁴ 'I left for the bathing ghat of the Vaikai of fresh floods. When I came back I heard

1 See, for details, canto ix, ll. 5-36.

2 The mother of Kaṇṇaki, now born as one of the twin daughters of Araṭṭan Ceṭṭi.

3 The mother of Kōvalan, born now as one of the twin daughters of Araṭṭan Ceṭṭi.

4 Mātari, the cowherdess, now born as the daughter of a Brahmana arcaka.

(the news) from the youngsters of the famous ancient city. I did not see you in my house. O my dear, my dear, where have you hidden yourself ?'

In this manner the three young bangled girls with lisping mouths, lamented again and again and sobbed and wept, uttering their elders' words before the warlike king with golden jewels on his chest. When the king of the pōntai garland and victorious anklet looked at the face of Māṭalan, the Brahmana wearing the sacred thread on his chest, he blessed him: 'O king of kings, long may you live !' and spoke what he remembered: 'These three were, in previous births, much attached to the devoted wife of Kōvalan who seized the must elephant's tusk to release (from its clutches) a Brahmana suffering deep sorrow, and thus attained the form of a celestial; but they could not follow her to the other world as they had performed no other act of virtue. Because of their excessive attachment born of heartfelt love towards the lovely lady (Kaṇṇaki) like the golden creeper, who fearlessly approached this ancient great city of Vaṇci, these two were born¹ as twins, to the great satisfaction of the good and modest wife of Araṭṭan Ceṭṭi; and this elderly cowherdess (Mātarī) who in her previous birth was devoted to the charming lady (Kaṇṇaki) and performed a kuravai dance has now been born as the little daughter of Cēṭakkuṭumpi in the service of Lord Viṣṇu.²

It is not strange that people who do good things attain heaven and people who have worldly minds are re-born, and that good and bad deeds have their own reward and that those born should die, and those dead should be re-born. Those are ancient truths.¹

1 Here the poet brings out the great Hindu ideal that detachment and not attachment leads to salvation with no more rebirths.

2 The kuraval dance is sacred to Viṣṇu and hence Mātarī was born in a family devoted to the service of Viṣṇu.

‘You who were born through the grace of Him who rides on the sacred Bull² and have won distinction as a king in this wide world, saw, clear as an object held in the palm of your hand, the fruits of righteous deeds and the forms of holy people. Live long from aeon to aeon protecting the earth! Live long, gracious monarch.’

Pleased with what the Brahmana Mātalaṅ said, the king endowed³ grants to the temple of the ever-youthful Pattiṇi who had twisted off her breast and thereby raised flames which enveloped the noisy kūṭal of the great Pāṇṭyan kingdom, much celebrated in poetical themes. He further ordered the conduct of daily festivals by instructing Dēvantikai to offer flowers, perfume and incense.

The monarch of the world circumambulated the shrine thrice and stood proffering his respects. In front of him the Arya kings⁴ released from prison, kings removed⁵ from the central jail, the Koṅku ruler of the Kuṭaku, the

1 The great truth that was taught by Kṛiṣṇa on the battle-field of Kurukṣētra to Arjuna. The Gītā says:

Jātasya hi dhruvō mṛtyuh dhruvam janma mṛtasya ca.

2 Another statement to testify that Ceṅkuṭṭuvan’s religion was Śaivism.

3 The evidence of epigraphy shows that this custom of endowing temples was practised by all Hindu kings in all periods of Indian history.

4 The Arya kings are Kaṇaka and Vijaya.

5 Cf. A.S.I., 1905-6, p. 170.

king of Mālva and Kayavāku (Gajabāhu),¹ the king of sea-girt Ceylon, prayed reverentially to the deity thus: 'Please grace our countries by your presence just as you have done this auspicious day, a fête-day at Imayavarm-pan's sacrifice.' Then a voice from the welkin issued forth: 'I have granted the boon.'

At this Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ, the other kings and their valorous armies praised the deity in pregnant words as if they had gained salvation (viṭu).² Then with the seeker of truth. Brahmana Māṭalaṇ, and with kings of low-sounding anklets who bowed at his feet, Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ entered the sacrificial hall.³ I⁴ also went in. Afterwards Dēvantikaḷ stood up before me god-possessed. She came to me, and said: 'In the artistic Audience Hall of the ancient city of Vañci, when you were seated by your father's side, you frowned upon the astrologer who predicted indications of your succeeding to the throne, so as to relieve the affliction of Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ famous for his chariot⁵ forces and his fragrant koṅku garland. You then went away to the Kuṇavāyirkōṭṭam⁶ and standing before

1 Here is evidence that Gajabāhu introduced the Pattinḷ cult into Ceylon and this cannot be untrue as we are still able to trace remains of this cult today. See Appendix iv.

2 Viṭu stands for mokṣa in Sanskrit.

3 This is definite evidence that Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ was a follower of the Vēdic religion. The following line throws welcome light on the personal religion of Iḷāṅkō-Aṭikaḷ also. If he had been converted to the Jaina faith he would not have attended the sacrifices performed according to Vēdic rules, with the help of the Vēdic Brahmanas.

4 I stands for the author, Iḷāṅkō-Aṭikaḷ.

5 We have to understand that Ceṅkuṭṭuvaṇ had not only a powerful elephant corps but also a strong chariot force.

6 The story of how Iḷāṅkō-Aṭikaḷ became an ascetic is told by Pattinḷ whose spirit is said to have entered Dēvantikaḷ.

eminent saints (paṭiyōr) you renounced all thought of the burdens of this earth in order to secure the kingship of the vast realm afar-off and of eternal bliss, incapable of approach by even the faculty of reason.¹

‘O distinguished and good people, you have now heard with distinctness the auspicious and benevolent words of the daughter of the gods (Kaṇṇaki) who proclaimed my story (through Dēvantikai). Rise above pleasure and pain in accordance with the approved course of conduct.² Know God, and serve those who have known Him. Fear speaking falsehood. Avoid tale-bearing. Refrain from meat-eating and abjure injury to any living being. Give gifts and perform the prescribed penance. Do not forget the good done to you. Despise bad friendship. Do not give false evidence, and never depart from words of truth. Do not fail to join assemblies of people learned in dharama. Strive ever to escape the meeting-places of the unrighteous.

‘Avoid other people’s wives, and give succour to those who are dying. Protect the household virtues, but reject what is bad. Abstain immediately from drinking, theft, lust, falsehood and useless company. Youth, wealth

1 These lines seem to be at once a reproduction of the great philosophic truth where occur the following :

yatō vācō nivartantē | aprāpya manasā saḥ |

Taitt. Āraṇ. 8. 4. 1 and 8. 9. 1.

anandam brahmaṇo vidvān | na bibhēti kutascanēti |

Taitt. Up. 2. 4. 1 and 2. 9. 1.

2 This line and the following are a categorical list of dharmas to be observed by all persons irrespective of caste or creed. This the Hindus call Sanātana Dharma—what we may term the ethical aspect of Hinduism. This portion of the canto shows strong influence of the teaching of the Kural.

and the body are impermanent.¹ You cannot escape from the days allotted to you : nor can you avoid what will happen. So seek the best help to the land of your final destination (Heaven). Do all this, O dwellers on this wide prosperous earth.'

Kaṭṭurai

'Of the three crowned monarchs, the garlanded ruler (Ceṅkuṭṭuvan) of the western kingdom of undiminished glory was born in the line of the Cēras. His virtue, martial valour and achievements, the glory of his ancient flourishing city, its gorgeous, unceasing festivals and the appearance of Dēvas, the wealth of the subjects abiding in his kingdom of unceasing prosperity, their abundance of provisions, songs and dances with their well-defined inter-relationships, his army of sword-warriors who achieved decisive victory in battles by righteous methods, his success in pursuing the enemy (at a long distance) in the expansive foaming sea,² and his expedition to the banks of the holy Ganges—all these deeds which form a part³ of his career, are narrated in the Vaṅcikkāṇṭam.

1 The fundamental teaching of Hinduism is that nothing goes with the dying man except his righteous or unrighteous deeds.

2 This shows that Ceṅkuṭṭuvan had an equally formidable naval force.

3 The author here acknowledges that only a part of the career of the Cēra monarch is given. He did not furnish a full account of his life as the contents did not warrant it.

NURKATTURAI

OR

EPITOME OF THE EPIC

So ends the Cilappatikāram, which really ends with the contents of the story in the *Maṇimēkalai*¹. In the manner in which lofty hills are reflected in a mirror, it expresses the essence of the cool Tamil country bounded² by the Kumari, Vēṅkaṭam and the eastern and western seas, in its two quarters of pure and impure Tamil³ comprising the five regions (tiṇais) where dwell man and gods devoted to duty and to the common practice⁴ of dharma, artha, and kāma; and it deals in chaste language expressive of good sense in flawless rythm, with akam (love) and puṇam (war)⁵, and with worthy songs (pāṭal), *eḷāl*⁶ paṇ, pāṇi, araṅku,⁷ vilakku, and *āṭal*⁸ and other things which were in conformity with established rules of the well-known forms of vari, kuravai and *sētam*⁹ couched in perfect and understandable Tamil.

1 The epic Maṇimēkalai is a continuation of the Cilappatikāram.

2 For the boundary limits of Tamilakam see Vīraśōḷiyam. Kumari is Cape Comorin and Vēṅkaṭam the Tirupati Hills.

3 Two kinds of Tamil were in vogue.

4 The Cilappatikāram is itself a treatise on the Trivarga which is dharma, artha and kāma.

5 This presupposes a period when anthologies of the Akam and Puṇam, have been collected under different heads and used as books.

6 Eḷāl is another term for yāl.

7 Araṅku is drama.

8 Āṭal represents different kinds of dances.

9 Sētam according to the Tamil Lexicon is an element in dancing. It may perhaps refer to the Koṭṭiccētam.

THE CILAPPATIKARAM ENDS

APPENDIX I

USE OF SANSKRIT WORDS AND THE DATE OF THE EPIC

BELOW is given a transliteration of Canto iv, 'Antimālaic-cirappucceykātai'. This canto has been chosen at random to show roughly the percentage of Sanskrit words in the text. The Sanskrit words in this canto are all italicized for the sake of easy reference. A counting of the total words in the canto furnishes the number 288. Out of these, thirty two, or eleven per cent, are Sanskrit words. In other words, for every eight Tamil words we meet with one Sanskrit word. Sanskrit expressions form one-ninth of the text. This shows clearly that the author of the Cilappatikāram lived centuries before the authors of the Tēvāram and Tivyappirapantam in which the percentage of Sanskrit words is very much higher. We know definitely that these were compositions extending from the fifth to the tenth century A.D., and it is reasonable to assume that the Cilappatikāram must have been composed very much earlier than the fifth century A.D. As it would take some considerable length of time to raise the percentage of Sanskrit words from 11 per cent to 30 per cent, we cannot be far wrong if we assign the composition of the epic to the second century A.D.

ANTIMĀLAIC CIRAPPUCCEY KĀTAI

Virikatir parappi yulakamuḷu tāṇṭa
Vorutaṇit tikiri yuravōr kāṇe
Nankaṇ vāṇat taṇinilā virikkun
Tiṅkaḷaṇ celvaṇ yāṇṭuḷaṇ kolleṇat
Ticaimukam pacantu cemmalarḱ kaṇkaṇ

- Muḷunir vāra muḷumeyum paṇittut
 Tiraini rātai yirunila maṭantai
 Yaraicukeṭut talamvaru mallar kālāik
 Karaikeḷu kuṭikaḷ kaiṭalai vaippa
 10 Vāraipōku kuṭikaḷo ṭorutīram parri
 Valampaṭu tānai manṇa rilvaḷip
 Pulampaṭa viṛutta viruntin manṇarir
 Rāḷtunai tuṛantōr taṇittuya reytak
 Kātalarp puṇarntōr kaḷimakiḷ veytak
 15 Kuḷalvaḷar mullaiyir kōvalartammoṭu
 Maḷalait tumpi vāyvait tūṭa
 Varukār kuṛumperin tarumpupoṭi vāciaṇ
 Ciṛukār celvaṇ maṛukir rūṛra
 Velvaḷai makaḷir maṇiviḷak keṭuppa
 20 Mallan mūtūr mālaivan tiṛuttēṇa
 Viḷaiya rāyinum pakaiyaracu kaṭiyuṇ
 Cerumāṇ ṭēṇṇar kulāmuta lākali
 Nanti vāṇattu veṇṇpirai tōṇrip
 Puṇkaṇ mālaik kuṛumperin toṭṭip
 25 Pāṇmayir ririyātu pārkatir parappi
 Miṇara cāṇṭa veḷḷir viḷakkat
 Tilvaḷar mullaiyoṭu mallikai yaviḷnta
 Palpūṇ cēkkaip paḷḷiyuṭ polintu
 Centukirk kōvai ceṇṇrēn talku
 30 Lantukiṇ mēkalai yacaintaṇa varunta
 Nilavuppayaṇ koḷḷu neṭunilā murrattuk
 Kalaviyum pulaviyum kātalar kaḷittāṇk
 Kārva neṇṇamoṭu kōvalar ketirik
 Kōlan koṇṭa mātavi yaṇriyun
 35 Kuṇaticai marunkiṇ Vāḷḷayir taṇṇoṭu
 Kuṇaticai marunkir kāraki ruṇantu
 Vaṭamalaip piṛanta vāṇkēḷ vaṭṭattut
 Teṇmalaip piṛanta candāṇa maṛukat
 Tāmaraiḷ koḷumuriṭ tāṭupaṭu ceḷumalark

- 40 Kāmaru kuvaḷaiḱ kaḷunir māmalarp
 Paintaḷirp paḷalai parūkkā lāraṇ
Cuntaraccuṇṇat tukaḷoṭu maḷaiyic
 Cindupu parinta ceḷumpūṇ cekkai
Mandamā rutattu mayankiṇar malintāṅk
- 45 Kāviyan koḷuna rakalat toṭunkik
 Kāviyan kaṇṇār kaḷittuyileyta
 Vaṇceṇ ciraṭi yaṇicilam poḷiya
 Menruki lalkuṇ mēkalai nīṅkak
 Konkai munṇir kunkuma meḷutāṇ
- 50 Maṅkala vaṇiyir Piritāṇi maḱilāḷ
 Koṭunkuḷai turantu vaṭintuviḷ kātina
 Ṭiṅkaḷ vāṇmukaṇ ciṇuviyar piriya
 Cenḱaya neṭunka ṇaṇcaṇa maṇappap
Pavaḷa vāṇuta ṇilaka miḷappat
- 55 Tavaḷa vāṇakai kōvala ṇilappa
 Maiyiruṇ kūnta neyyaṇi maṇappak
 Kaiyaṇu neṇcattuk kaṇṇaki yaṇṇiyum
 Kātalarp pirinta mātar nōtaka
 Vūtulaik kuruki ṇuyirttana roṭuṅki
- 60 Vēṇir paḷḷi mēvātu kaḷintu
 Kūtirppaḷḷik kuṇunka ṇaṭaittu
Malayattāramu manimut tāramu
 Malarmulai yākat taṭaiyātu varuntat
 Ṭaḷik kuvaḷaiyoṭu taṇcen kaḷunir
- 65 Viḷpūṇ cekkai mēvātu kaḷiyat
 Tuṇaipuṇa raṇṇat tūviyir ceritta
 Viṇaiyaṇai mēmpaṭat tiruntutuyil pera
 Tuṭaipperun koḷunaro ṭutar kālat
 Ṭiṭaikkūmi ierintu kaṭaikkūlai yōṭṭik
- 70 Kalankā vuḷḷam kalāṅkak kataicivantu
 Vilankinimir neṭuṅkaṇ pulampumut turaippa
 Vanna menṇaṭai naṇṇrp poykai
 Yaṇpa ṇārun tēmpoti-ṇaruvirait

- Tāmaraic* cevvāyat taṇṇaraṭ kūṇṭar
 75 Paṇvāy vaṇṭu nōtiram pāṭak
 Kāṇvaru kuvaṭaik kaṇmalar viḷippap
 Puḷvāy muraca moṭu poṇimayir vāraṇattu
 Muḷvāy canka muṇaimurai yārppa
 Vuravunirp parappi nūrtuyi leṭuppi
 80 Yiravut talaippeyarum vaikaṇai kāru
 Maraiyiruḷ yāmattum pakalum tuṇcār
 Viraimalar vāḷiyōṭu karuppuvil lēnti
Makara velkoṭi maintaṇ riritara
Nakaran kāva ṇaṇisiraṇ tatuven.

FOURTH 'TIRUVĀYMOLI-PUKALUNALLORUVAN

(From Tivyappirapantam)

- 1 Pukaḷum nal oruvaṇenko ? Poruvilcīrp pūmiyenko ?
 Tikaḷumtanparavaiyenko ? Tīyenko ? Vāyuvēenko ?
 Nikaḷum ākācamenko ? Niḷcuṭaṭiraṇṭumenko ?
 Ikaḷvil ivvaṇaittumenko ? Kaṇṇaṇaikkūvumāre.
- 2 Kūvumār aṭiyamāṭṭēṇ kunraṇkaḷ aṇaittumenko ?
 Mēvucir māṭiyenko ? viḷanku tārakaikaḷenko ?
 Nāviyal kalaikaḷenko ? ṇāṇanallāviyenko ?
Pāvucīrkkāṇṇaṇ emmāṇ Pankayak kaṇṇaṇaiye.
- 3 Pankayak kaṇṇaṇenko ? Pavaḷacceṇ vāyaṇenko ?
 Ankatir aṭiyaṇenko ? Aṇcaṇa vaṇṇeṇenko ?
 Cenkatir muṭiyaṇenko ? Tirumaṇu mārvaṇenko ?
Cankucakkarattaṇenko ? Cātimāṇikkattaiye.
- 4 Cātimāṇikkamenko ? cavikoḷpoṇ muttamenko ?
Cātinalvayiramenko ? Tavivilcīr viḷakkamenko ?
Āṭiyam cōtiṇenko ? āṭiyam Puraṭaṇenko ?
Ātumil kālatentai accutaṇ amalāṇaiye.
- 5 Accutaṇ amalāṇenko ? aṭiyavar viṇaiketukkuṇ
Naccumā maruntamenko ? nalankaṭ al amutamenko ?
Accuvaik kaṭṭiyenko ? aṇucuvai yaṭicilenko ?
Neyccuvait tēralenko ? kaṇiyenko ? Pāḷeṇkano ?

- 6 Pālenko ? nānkuvēdap payaṇenko ? Camāyaniti
 Nūlenko ? Nuṭaṅkukeḷvi icaiyenko ? Ivarruṇalla
 Mēlenko ? viṇaiyiṇ mikka payaṇenko ? kaṇṇaṇenko ?
 Mālenko ? māyaṇenko ? vānavar ātiaiyē.
- 7 Vānavarātiyenko ? Vānavar daivamenko ?
 Vānavar bhōkamenko ? vānavar murrumenko ?
 Ūnamil celvamenko ? ūnamil cuvarkameūko ?
 Unamil mōkkamenko ? Oḷimaṇi vaṇṇaṇaiye.
- 8 Oḷimaṇi vaṇṇaṇenko ? oruvanērettaninra
 Naḷiramatic caṭaiyaṇenko ? nāṇmukak kaṭavulenko ?
 Aḷimakilaṇtu ulakamellām paṭaittavai yētta ninra
 Kaḷimalart tuḷavaṇ emmāṇ kaṇṇaṇai māyaṇaiye.
- 9 Kaṇṇaṇai māyaṇtaṇṇaik kaṭalkaṭaintu amutamkoṇṭa
 Aṇṇalai accutaṇai aṇantaṇai, aṇantaṇaṇmēl
 Naṇṇiṇaṅkuraikiṇṇānai jñālamuṇṇumilota mālai
 Eṇṇumāru aṇiyamāṭṭēn yāvaiyum yavarumtāṇe.
- 10 Yāvaiyum yavarumtāṇāy avaravarcamayamtōrum
 Tōyvilāṇpulaṇaintukkum colappaṭāṇ uṇarvin mūrti
 Avicēruyirinuḷḷāl āṭumōr parrilāta
 Pāvaṇaiyataṇaikkūṭil avanaiyum kūṭalāme.
- 11 Kūṭivaṇṭaraiyum taṇṭark kontalpol vannantannai
 Māṭalarpoḷil kurukūr vaṇ Caṭakōpaṇ conna
 Pāṭalōṛāyirattuḷ Ivaiyum orupattumvallār
 Viṭila bōkamaiti virumpuvar amararmoyitte.

APPENDIX II

ASTRONOMICAL DATA AND THE DATE OF THE CILAPPATIKĀRAM

IN commenting on the first three lines of Canto x of the Cilappatikāram, Aṭiyārkunallār furnishes some interesting astronomical data as to the commencement and duration of Indra's festival, the sea reverie of Kōvalan and Mātavi, and the date on which Kōvalan and Kaṇṇaki left Pukār for Madura. The texts in question give only a hint as to the time of starting for Madura; but collecting the details as given in the Maṇimēkalai, and in 'Kaṭalāṭu-kātai', Aṭiyārkunallār has done some valuable research which deserves our close examination and scrutiny. As I have remarked in the footnote on the three opening lines of Canto x, the late L. D. Swamikannu Pillai put the date to severe test and came to the conclusion that the premises were incorrect. I felt the subject required further investigation, and with the aid of my friend Mr P. R. Chidambara Aiyar of the Kodaikanal Observatory, I have been able to arrive at a more or less satisfactory conclusion.

Let me first state what Aṭiyārkunallār has to say. The full moon day in the month of Cittirai, during which the festival of Indra commenced, fell on a Saturday. The festival was celebrated for four weeks. It ended on the twenty-eighth day of the month of Vaikāsi during the sea reverie when Kōvalan suspected Mātavi's attitude towards him and vice versa. This resulted in their misunderstanding and consequent separation. According to Aṭiyārkunallār's calculation, this day of misunderstanding (ūṭutal) was a Monday, the thirteenth tithi of Pūrvapakṣa when the ruling asterism was Anusa. The very next day, i.e. the twenty-ninth day of Vaikāsi (which was a Tuesday and the fourteenth tithi of the Pūrvapakṣa), during the asterism Keṭṭai, very early in the morning, before the sun rose but when the moon had disappeared, Kōvalaṇ and Kaṇṇaki set forth for Madura. Aṭiyārkunallār remarks that that was a particularly inauspicious time and led to the death of those who started at that particular hour.¹

In a later Canto² Aṭiyārkunallār tells us in an informing note that the very day when the outskirts of Madura were reached by Kōvalaṇ and Kaṇṇaki was the last day of the month of Āṇi. As we have already seen, according to that commentator the couple left Pukār for Madura on the 29th of Vaikāsi, and if his calculation is to be believed, it took a full month and a little more for the travellers to reach Madura. If they had started on the 29th of Vaikāsi which was a Tuesday, and if they reached the outskirts on the last day of Āṇi, then it must have been a Thursday. We hear in a still later Canto³ that Madura was destroyed by fire on a day of Bharaṇi-Kiṟuttikai, Aṣṭamī during the dark fortnight in the month of Āṇi, on a Friday about midnight. An attempt has been made, rightly, to reject Mr Swamikannu Pillai's theory of 756 A.C.; for, his calculations do not seem to satisfy any of the data furnished either by the text or the commentary.⁴ Evidently the burning of Madura took place on the first of Āṇi which was a

1 See also his commentary on ll. 5-6 'Kaṭalāṭukātai.'

2 xiii, 'Puraṇceriiruttakātai.' ll. 30-7, and especially l. 36.

3 xlii, ll. 133-7.

4 See K. G. Sankar's article in Q.J.M.S., Vol. VIII, pp. 34-60. But his theory of 157 A.C. also does not cover all astronomical details.

Friday. On the last day of Āṇi, they were Mātariś' guests for the day and in the evening Kōvalaṇ went with the anklet into the city and was executed. Immediately Kaṇṇaki met the king and cursed that the city be consumed by flames.

While we are discussing the date of the Cilappatlkāram from an astronomical viewpoint, it is better to say a word about the reference to Friday in the epic. Years ago when Indological researches were in their infancy, Dr Fleet suggested that India borrowed weekdays from Greece about A.D. 400 and put them to popular use not earlier than A.D. 800. Granting that India is a borrower in this respect, she need not necessarily be indebted to the Greeks who were themselves borrowers and perhaps had no knowledge of weekdays before the first century A.D. A more reasonable suggestion would be that borrowing had taken place direct from the Chaldeans whose intercourse with India from at least the time of Darius (500 B.C.) cannot be disputed. The use of weekdays in ancient Hindu literature is not rare. The Purāṇas, like the Matsya (ch. 93, ll. 10-20) and Vishṇu (Bk. I, ch. 12), refer to planets in the order of weekdays. The Vaikhānasa sūtra, which cannot be later than the second century B.C., mentions the Budhavāra. Besides, we perform the arghyam every day in weekday order during our sandhya prayers. This has to be traced to the Parisistas of Āsvalāyana Grhyasūtra. It may be contended that the Parisistas are held to be later than the texts of the Grhyasūtra. Even if this position were accepted, that portion cannot be later than by one or two centuries. These facts, among others, show the ancient use of weekdays in the Hindu calendar and the reference to Friday cannot be taken as an argument to assign a later date for the composition.

Proceeding to work upon the data given by Aṭiyārkuṇallār, and by bringing the evidence of the Gajabāhu synchronism to clinch it, we find the year A.D. 174 answers nearly perfectly. In this year the first of Cittirai was a Tuesday, and would be 16 March in the Gregorian calendar. The following table may clarify our position:

174 A.D.

1st Cittirai	=	16 March (Tuesday)
First new moon in the year	=	4.7997
		<hr/>
		20 7997 March (Saturday)
Duration from new moon to new moon	=	29.5306
		<hr/>
		50.3303
		<hr/>
Days in the month	=	31
First new moon in Vaikāsi	=	19.3303 (April, Monday)
Interval to full moon	=	14.7653 ¹
		<hr/>
		34.0956
Days in the month	=	30
Full moon day (May)	=	4.0956 (Tuesday) in Vaikāsi

This Tuesday the fourth of May in A.D. 174 coincides with Kēṭṭai naksatram in the early morning. What we have to note here is that Paurṇima and not Caturthi ends early in the forenoon on Tuesday. There is the Keṭṭai naksatram before sunrise on that day. In questions of chronology from an astronomical standpoint, there is bound to be a certain amount of uncertainty. This is largely due to the different Siddhāntas or systems followed by different schools of thought, such as the Sūryasiddhānta, the Āryasiddhānta, Vākya, etc. What system was in use in the age of Iṭāṅkō-Aṭikaḷ, the author of the epic, it is rather difficult to determine. But for our purpose, there is indicated the astronomical fact that on the early morning in question the moon had set before the sun rose, although it is difficult to know, in the absence of accurate data, what was the actual interval between the setting of the moon and the rising of the sun.

1 If we subtract the interval in tithi 14.7653 from 19.3303, we get 4.5650, when occurred the full moon in April, on a Sunday.

As to whether sauramāna or cāndramāna was in vogue at the time, there is no room for doubt, since the word Cittirai (which is the one used by Aṭiyārkunallār) has always meant the solar month, the corresponding lunar month being known as Caitra. As the text of Aṭiyārkunallār is clear in the use of the expression Cittirai and not Caitra, it can be easily conceded that the commentator used the sauramāna method of reckoning. I am aware that we should not rely entirely on the astronomical combination as evidence in itself. For the argument is that, as the event took place at a particular time of day when a particular astronomical combination was prevailing, a certain number of cycles of the moon in its two aspects, viz. tithi and naksatra, must coincide with a certain number of revolutions of the sun, along with a certain number of weeks, and multiples of the hours in a day. This will be the L.C.M. of the sidereal period of the moon, the synodic period of the moon, the solar year, the week, the hours in a day. As one is not divisible by the other, roughly the product of all these quantities has to be taken to be the period that would elapse before the same tithi and naksatra on the same day of the week could be expected to occur again at that particular hour of the day in that particular part of the year. This can by no means be a short period. This particular case, one may say, would only recur after some centuries. We can therefore easily set aside 756 A.C. fixed by the late Swamikannu Pillai.

My object in examining the data furnished by Aṭiyārkunallār was to see whether it would supplement other inferable historical facts which have led us to fix the age of the composition of the Cilappatikāram in the second half of the second century A.D. Our examination has proved beyond doubt that the astronomical data given by Aṭiyārkunallār are very strong contributory evidence for fixing the date as the second century A.D. The details furnished by the commentator fit in with the year A.D. 174, and this date fully satisfies the Gajabāhu synchronism as Gajabāhu had ascended the throne three years earlier in A.D. 171.

APPENDIX III

MUSIC IN THE *CILĀPPATIKĀKAM*¹

THE ancient Tamils possessed a highly developed system of music. This is evident from a perusal of the Tamil classics. Their musical culture was at a high level. Works dealing exclusively with the science of music were written during the Caṅkam period, but they were lost long ago. The Cilappatikāram of the second century A.D. throws a flood of light on the music of the Tamils. Music in Tamil nomenclature is icai. An etymological interpretation is furnished by Aṭiyārkunallār in the closing lines of his elaborate commentary on Canto iii, l. 26.² Those who practised music were styled Pāṇar and sometimes Perumpāṇar. These expressions occur frequently in the epic. There was a community, which included flutists and drummers, whose hereditary occupation was music. Even a section of Brahmanas and Ambaṇavar took to music as a profession. We get more interesting details of paṇ if we turn to Aṭiyārkunallār's gloss to ll. 160-7 of Canto xiv. Four division of paṇ were distinguished. These are pālai, Kuṟiñci, Marutam and Cevvaḷi, suggesting at once a classification after the regions, in other words, specific melody types. The different musical pieces were brought under some classification or other. One classification was tenfold: centurai, veṇṭurai,

1 I am indebted to Sri P. Sambamurti, Lecturer in Music, University of Madras, for helping me in writing this appendix. I have also drawn upon two lectures on 'Ancient Tamil Music' by Swami Vipulananda, reported in The Hindu on 25 and 26 February 1936.

2 p. 105 of the Tamil edition.

perumtēvapaṇi, ciṛutēvapaṇi, muttakam, peruvaṇṇam, arruvari, kaṇalvari, virimuraṇ, and talaipōkumaṇṇilam,¹ Almost all these pieces of music are found referred to directly or indirectly in the epic. For example, centuṛai and veṇṭurai are implied in Canto iii, l. 29. Perumtēvapaṇi and ciṛutēvapaṇi are used in ordinary music as also in naṭākat-tamiḷ or dramatic compositions. While perumtēvapaṇi is used in praise of Baladeva, ciṛutēvapaṇi was used in praise of caste būtas.² Examples of arruvari are the three songs on the Kāvēri in Canto vii. The whole of Canto vii is entitled 'Kāṇalvari'. This epic helps us to understand the nature of their fundamental scale, the resultant scales that they obtained by the modal shift of tonic, the ragas that they used, the musical forms in vogue at that time, the instruments that they used in concerts, the types of dances cultivated and many other useful details relating to their art. 'Araṅkērrukātai' and 'Acciyarkuravai' are two cantos containing a mine of information relating to Tamil music.

THE CUDDHA-MELA (FUNDAMENTAL SCALE)

The ancient Tamils used a scale of twenty-two srutis. In other words they recognized and used as many as twenty-two notes in the sthayi or octave. This is exactly the number of notes that a refined ear can distinguish and use in a saptaka. The terms alaku (அலகு) and matra (மாத்திரை) are used as the equivalent of sruti. It was the scale of just intonation that they used. The notes of their foundation scale (suddha-mēla) had the following sruti values :

1 This is found in Cikaṇḍiyār's Icainupukkam. See text, p. 190.

2 Canto iii, l. 107.

4 4 3 2 4 3 2

The figure 4 is the equivalent of a catussruti interval ($9/8$, major tone); the figure 3 is the equivalent of a tristruti interval ($10/9$ minor tone); and the figure 2 is the equivalent of dvisruti interval ($16/15$, semitone). In the series: 4 4 3 2 4 3 2, each figure signifies the value of the interval between the note it stands for and its previous note. Thus in the suddha scale of the ancient Tamils there were three catussruti intervals (3 major tones), two tristruti intervals (2 minor tones) and two dvisruti intervals (2 semitones). There was a Catussruti interval between ni and sa (i.e. between tāram and kural), between sa and ri (i.e. between kural and tuttam), and between ma and pa (i.e. between uḷai and iḷi). There was a tristruti interval between ri and ga (i.e. between tuttam and kaikkiḷai) and between pa and dha (i.e. between iḷi and viḷari). The dvisruti interval existed between ga and ma (i.e. between kaikkiḷai and uḷai) and between dha and ni (i.e. between viḷari and tāram). That is expressed in modern terminology thus :

4	4	3	2	4	3	2
(ni) sa	ri	ga	ma	pa	dha	ni
$\frac{9}{8}$	$\frac{9}{8}$	$\frac{10}{9}$	$\frac{16}{15}$	$\frac{9}{8}$	$\frac{10}{9}$	$\frac{16}{15}$
catussruti interval	catussruti interval	tristruti interval	dvisruti interval	catussruti interval	tristruti interval	dvisruti interval

$$\frac{9}{8} \times \frac{9}{8} \times \frac{10}{9} \times \frac{16}{15} \times \frac{9}{8} \times \frac{10}{9} \times \frac{16}{15} = 2$$

In other words, the frequencies of the notes figuring in the suddha scale were :

s	r	g	m	p	dha	n	s
1	$\frac{9}{8}$	$\frac{5}{4}$	$\frac{4}{3}$	$\frac{3}{2}$	$\frac{5}{3}$	$\frac{16}{9}$	2

Representing these facts in a more visual manner, the svrasthānas of the Tamil suddha scale will appear in the following places :

This scale approximates to the modern harikāmbhōji mēla and so it follows that the suddha scale of the ancient Tamils was harikāmbhōji.¹

It is interesting to note that the suddha scale of Bharata had the following sruti values :

4 3 2 4 4 3 2

It is evident from this that the tonic note of the Tamil scale was the fourth note or the madhyama of the scale of Bharata. The fourth note of Bharata's scale when taken as the tonic results in harikāmbhōji. We may say that the suddha scale of the ancient Tamils was the madhyama mūrchanā of sadja grāma just as the modern sāṅkarābharāṇa is the nisāda mūrchanā of sadja grāma. In other words, the suddha scale of Bharata is the pañcama mūrchanā of the suddha scale. That harikāmbhōji is the suddha-mēla of the ancient Tamils is a fact not hitherto noticed by many scholars. An analysis of paṇs reveals that a substantial number of them are in rāgas which are either derivatives of harikāmbhōji or are in rāgas which use a majority of svaras belonging to the harikāmbhōji scale. One merit of this scale is that the notes² figuring therein can be sounded pure and that one can stand on them for a length of

1 Harikāmbhōji takes the same notes as the major scale of European music except that B flat takes the place of B natural.

2 It is evident that these notes could not have belonged to one and the same octave.

time. There are other interesting facts in support of harikāmbhōji. The following sloka gives the names of the animals and birds whose cries approximated to the pitch of the sapta svaras :

ṣadjam mayūrō vadati gavastvṛṣabha bhasinaḥ |
ajāvikantu gāndhāram krouncaḥ kraṇati madhyamam ||
puṣpa sādharāṇē kālē pikaḥ kūjati pañcamam |
dhaivatam hrēṣatē vājī niṣadam bṛmhatē gajaḥ ||

Tamīl books associate the following animals and birds with the sapta svaras : வண்டு (beetle), கிளி (parrot), குதிரை (horse), யானை (elephant), குயில் (cuckoo), பசு (cow) and ஆடு (goat).

The fact that the notes of the suddha scale were compared to the cries of certain animals and birds is proof that our ancients had a conception of absolute pitch.

NAME OF THE SVARAS	SANSKRIT LIST	TAMIL LIST
Sa	Peacock	Beetle
Ri	Cow	Parrot
Ga	Goat	Horse
Ma	Heron	Elephant
Pa	Indian nightingale	Cuckoo
Dha	Horse	Cow
Ni	Elephant	Goat

A perusal of the above table reveals the fact that all except two are animals common to both lists. Since the sadja grāma is the pañcama mūrchanā of the Tamil suddha scale, it will be found that the lists of animals and birds also agree in a corresponding manner except that the beetle and the parrot take the place of the heron and the cuckoo of the Sanskrit list. This list supplies more evidence to show that the suddha scale of the Tamils was the harikāmbhōji scale, viz. the madhyama murchana of the sadja grāma.

RĀGAS

By the modal shift of tonic, seven murchanas or scales were derived. They are named: cempalai, paṭumalaippalai, cevvaḷippalai, arumpalai, kōṭippalai, viḷarippalai and mērcempalai. The initial (tonic) notes of these scales progress in the avarōhaṇa krama (downward series). The use and application of the seven pālais are seen in Canto iii, ii. 59-60 and ll. 70-1, and the commentary of Arumpatavuraīyācīriyar thereon. It is said that when Mātavi sang, she well observed the four sātis: akani-laimarutam, puṇanilaimarutam, arukiyaṇmarutam and perukiyaṇmarutam and had an eye to the threefold iyakkam which may be rendered high, low, and middle pitch (Canto vii, ll. 35-44). The distinction of *alaku*s or srutis has been tabulated as follows :

Cempalai	...	4	4	3	2	4	3	2
Paṭumalaippalai	...	2	4	4	3	2	4	3
Cevvaḷippalai	...	3	2	4	4	3	2	4
Arumpalai	...	4	3	2	4	4	3	2
Kōṭippalai	...	2	4	3	2	4	4	3
Viḷarippalai	...	3	2	4	3	2	4	4
Mērcempalai	...	4	3	2	4	3	2	4

Four main pālais are referred to which correspond to derivative grāmas, and fresh scales were derived by the process of modal shift of tonic in each case. Campūrṇa rāgas (heptatonic scales) were called paṇ (பாண்) and varja rāgas (transilient scales) tirāṇ (திராண்).

நிறைந்த நரம்பு நிகழும் பண்ணெனல்
குறைந்த நரம்பு திறமெனக் கொள்க.

Tirām is also used in the sense of an auṣava rāga (pentatonic scale). Paṇṇiarrīram signified a sodara rāga (hexatonic scale) and tirattirām signified a svarantara rāga (a scale with four notes).

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

Music was always associated with dancing in ancient times. It is no wonder therefore that all the information we are given about ancient Tamil music is in connexion with the dances of Mātavi and the group dance recounted in a later canto of the Cilappatikaram. The treatment of music as a separate art, i.e. independent of its relation to dancing, is found only in later works.

A remarkable feature of the education of an actress, which began in her fifth year, was a thorough training in dancing and music. Among other things the young girl was trained to sing songs composed in foreign languages and to play on the yāl, the drum, and the flute. In addition to the drummer, lute player and flutist, there was the musician of honour or chief musician, and a composer of songs who improvised pieces suitable to all occasions. This bears great testimony to the creative mind of the composer. From the fact that a separate music master is mentioned we have to assume that this composer may or may not have been a musician himself, for it is said that verses composed by him were set to music by the musician. There is an elaborate description of the harpist and the harp in ll. 70-94 of 'Arāṅkerrukātai'. The passage in question has been rendered difficult of correct interpretation by Aṭiyārkkuṇallār's not commenting on these lines except to give a few short notes, most of which are copied from the commentary of Arumpatavuraiyācīriyar. But with the materials available, it seems fairly certain that cakōṭayal was the kind of harp generally used on the stage by a debutante. It had fourteen major strings. The flute usually preceded the harp. In other words the song was started by the flutist and followed by the harpist. Then there was the beating of the maddalam, the kuṭamulaṭavu and the idakkai, one following the other. Idakkai was a musical instrument used for keeping time. Sometimes one and the same song was played on the harp and the flute at one and the same time.

Thus we see that instruments in those times were used for accompaniments. The three great instruments, viz. vīṇa vēṇu and mirudangam, have their parallels in the yāl, kuḷal and maddalam of the Tamils. Since the range of the human voice was three octaves the compass of the stringed and wind instruments used for accompaniments was also of the same range. The three octaves were respectively called the mandavisai (lower octave or the mandra sthāyi), samanisai (middle octave or the madhya sthāyi) and vallisai (higher octave or the tāra sthāyi). The strings of the yāl were tuned to notes of absolute pitch and the instrument itself was played on open strings. It is evident that in addition to metallic strings of different varieties and thickness and density, gut must also have been used. Conclusions based solely on the lengths of the strings of the yāl in the absence of data relating to their nature, cross section, and density must necessarily be incorrect. The strings of the yāl were named after the notes to which they were tuned. This facilitated the playing of different rāgas by the modal shift of tonic. In the absence of facilities for the introduction of gāmakas, we have to conclude that the yāl produced only pure notes. The basic melody was played by the yāl player and the melody was adorned by gāmakas from the flute which also repeated the melody in the higher octave. In a medallion from the Amarāvati sculpture preserved in the archaeological gallery of the Madras Government Museum we see a woman playing the yāl, indicating that the instrument was very popular during the time of the Cilappatikaram and the centuries preceding it.

Varieties of Yāl. Mention has already been made of the cakōṭayāl which was usually a stage instrument. Among other kinds referred to are the pēriyāl as opposed to ciriyāl. The first was a large harp consisting of twenty-one strings while the second was a small harp with seven strings. Among the different varieties of yāl, these two seem to be very ancient. But in the early centuries of the Christian era we find reference to makarayāl distinguished by seventeen strings and cakōṭayāl with fourteen strings. These yāls or harps were early in use. Here and there we meet with descriptions of them and of how they were sometimes inlaid with gems and kept in decorated cases. In other Caṅkam classics, like the Poruṇararruppaṭai, Malaipaṭukattam and Kallāṭam, we find descriptions of yāl. One gathers from all these that the pēriyāl was a pretty instrument and was portable. Its twenty-one strings represented the three sthāyis of seven notes each.

The yāl and the vīṇa are not identical instruments. The former had no frets. The term vīṇa has been used by some writers to mean stringed instruments generally but latterly it has come to denote a stringed instrument with frets. Māṇikkavācakar says: 'இன்னிகை வீணையர் யாழினர் ஒருபால்' and so it is clear that there were two distinct instruments. The yāl was a majestic and beautiful instrument and must have produced impressive and melodious music. It became obsolete some eight centuries ago. It ceased to be in use the moment the fretted viṇa with its great musical possibilities appeared on the firmament of South Indian music.

The instrumentalists of those days seem to have reached a high standard of playing. Their finger technique, the skill with which they displayed the ghana naya bhavas, the wonderful command that they possessed over their instruments and the artistic finish of their performances are all echoed in the Cilappatikaram. The performers had their allotted seats on the stage.

PARALLEL IDEAS

There are many parallel ideas in the ancient works on music in Tamil and Sanskrit. The similarities in the values of the sruti intervals and the names of animals and birds whose cries approximated to the seven notes have already been referred to. Ni was the first note in the yaḷ and it was to this same note that the string of the viṇa was tuned in ancient times. The classifications of svaras into vadi, samvadi, anuvadi and vivadi have their correspondence in iṇai (இணை), kiḷai (கிணை), naṭpu (நட்டி), and pakai (பகை) notes.

It is a pity that the beautiful musical system of the ancient Tamils is now lost. Even in the times of Aṭiyār-kunallār it was quite forgotten. Some of the ancient paṇs are however still used in the recitals of the Tevaram hymns.

APPENDIX IV

THE PATTINI CULT THROUGH THE AGES

IN Ceylon, more than in India, the Pattini cult has continued for a long time. In the march of years many legends have grown round the origin and career of Kaṇṇaki, and the Sinhalese tradition is very different from what obtains in South India. In Ceylon Pattini has been regarded as Durgā with as many as eight Kālīs waiting in attendance on her. She causes and cures epidemics like smallpox, and so prayers are offered at her shrine.¹ One mode of prayer was the worship of the anklet symbol (cilampu) which was placed in a decorated vessel with the figure of a cobra moulded on it. There are works in Sinhalese entitled Calampa Kathava and Pattini Pidima dealing with the career of Pattini and the ritual of offering prayers to her.² The cult has become so popular that in one district alone, Jaffna, there are as many as a dozen temples to Pattini. Many miraculous deeds are attributed to her. It is not possible nor necessary to give all details concerning the cult in an appendix like this. One such miraculous deed was that when she planted her foot on a rock, there gushed forth a fountain of water.

H. Parker, the author of Ancient Ceylon, refers to this cult in more than one place. In the last portions of his book he records a tradition that Kaṇṇaki was reborn a demoness and entered Ceylon with two sons of the Pāṇṭyan king, notwithstanding the stout opposition from the four guardian deities of the island. We are told that this tradition has given rise to what is known as the Fire-Walking Ceremony conducted every year in her honour.¹

1 H. Parker, Ancient Ceylon, pp. 151, 161.

2 Cey. Ant., Vol. I, No. 2. p. 128.

Still another interesting story current in certain parts of Ceylon is that Kaṇṇaki was a daughter of the Pāṇṭyan King. Astrologers predicted that she would be the ruin of the Pāṇṭyan kingdom. The King who believed this put his daughter in a box and left it afloat on a river. Two members of the Vaiśya caste, who were merchants by profession, noticed this box and had it rescued. The names of these merchants were Maṇakkar and Mācāttar. The former adopted her as his daughter and the latter's son married her in course of time.² This tradition has special interest for us in South India as the Kōvalaṇ drama is still shown on the stage and very popularly attended. The Tamil dramatic representation has more or less adopted this Ceylonese tradition in its delineation of the early life of Kōvalaṇ and Kaṇṇaki.

This now leads us to inquire into the different turns which the epic episode of Kaṇṇaki has taken in South India.³ One is the association of this Pattinī cult with the Draupadī Ammaṇ festival, Draupadī being the chaste queen of the five Pāṇṭava brothers. Tradition affirms that she is one of the five kanyas whose names are daily remembered so as to keep the torchlight of morality even burning throughout the length and breadth of this land. Tamil tradition refers to Draupadī as aliyata pattinī, the eternal Pattinī or an incarnation of chastity. Later tradition has confounded the Kaṇṇaki cult with the Draupadī cult, and

1 Parker, op. cit., pp. 632-3.

2 Cey. Ant., Vol. VIII, No. 3. p. 252.

3 See M. Raghava Aiyangar's Cēran Cēṅkuṭṭuvan, pp. 141-4: Ārālyccēṭokutl, pp. 238-40.

the whole thing has been treated as the Pattiṇi cult in general. Draupadiyamman Utsavam is a popular festival in Tamil India today, and in some places this is connected with a fire-walking ceremony.

That the Pattiṇi cult was once prevalent throughout South India is seen from the fact that even to the present day festivals in her honour are celebrated in a village on the outskirts of the town of Negapatam (Tanjore District) underneath a tree; in the region of Ārrūr (Madura District); and among the primitive Toda tribes in the Nilgiris. Still more interesting is the story contained in a popular book entitled Kovalankatai attributed to a certain Pukalēntiyār. This is probably a composition of 300 or 400 years ago. There is a similar version in a manuscript in the Malayāla country, showing some agreement with the Kovalankatai. It is said that the Bhagavati worshipped in Chengaṇūr or Triccheṇkaṇūr in Malabar was none other than Kaṇṇakitēvi, who took the role of a Kālī, popularly known as Durgātēvi, and finally settled in Tiruvorriyūr, the northern limit of the city of Madras. She became known there as Vaṭṭapuriyamman. There is a separate shrine to the deity in the northern prakara of the famous Tiruvorriyūr temple, and every year a festival is held in her honour lasting for fifteen days. Local tradition affirms that in ancient days a goldsmith was regularly offered to this deity in connexion with this festival. But once a goldsmith poet praised the goddess in suitable terms and extracted a promise that an animal would thereafter be substituted. One conspicuous feature of this festival is that on the last day, the special pandal erected for the sacrifice is fired, as a symbolical representation of the burning down of Madura city by Kaṇṇaki. This only demonstrates how the cult spread from one part of the land to the other, from Malabar to Coromandel.

Much more interesting is the tradition by which the Bhagavati enshrined at Cranganore goes by the name of Orraimulaicci, the goddess with one breast. How and when this metamorphosis of the Pattinī cult into the Bhagavati and Kālī cult of a demoness took place, it is difficult to say at this distance of time. Though the text of the Cilappatikaram does not give us any hint on this point, yet by the time of Arumpataavuraiyaciriyar, this transformation had become an accomplished fact. He says in one place that Kaṇṇaki was born as Durgā. This is due to the fact, to hazard a guess, that as Kālī worship was popular in the Tamil land from the earliest times, the Pattinī cult had in course of time been intimately associated with it.

Whatever may have been the later developments of the cult, it is certain that immediately following the foundation of the first shrine to Pattinīdevī by Ceṅkuṭṭuvan in the second century A.D., it was introduced into countries outside the Tamilnāṭu, like, Ceylon and Malva, and became a universal cult not only in South India and Ceylon but also in some parts of the Deccan.¹

1 Yet another distorted version of the story is found in M. Frere's Old Deccan Days (published in 1868 by John Murray, London) in a tale called 'Chandra's Vengeance'. Kōvalan is called Koila, and Kaṇṇaki is Chandra. The story goes that Koila, son of a sowkar, was captivated by a dancing-girl called Moulee and had won the garland by which he became her husband. After dire circumstances, Koila and his wife reached Madura where an old milk-seller offered them hospitality. A jeweller of that place who had deprived the Rani of a bangle, accused Koila of stealing it and had him cut in twain. Chandra set fire to the city although the old milk-seller advised her to spare the purwari (residences of low castes). Then she sewed the two halves of the dead body and prayed to Śiva to give it life. Koila was resurrected and returned home with Chandra. (This is a version of the story told to Frere in Goa by an ayah. The ayah herself had heard it from her grandparents who were living in Calicut.)

INDEX

[Numbers: Page numbers]

Āḍibūtam	299	Arumpatavuraiyācīriyar	78,
Agastya	64, 104, 135, 162	79, 80, 420
Agni	56	Arunṭati	95, 97, 132
Aimperum Kūlu	40, 129	Ārṇuvari	9
Aindra-Vyākaraṇam	196	Aryas	319, 338, 352
Airāvata	128, 331	Aryans	63, 72
Airāvata temple	59	Arya Kings	352, 355, 356, 364,
Aiyai 5, 203, 209, 252, 253, 263,		373, 374, 377, 399
383, 386, 391		Aryavarta	383
Aiyyaikōṭṭam	2	Ānamalai	33
Aiyai-kumari	201	Āṇporuṇai	48, 367, 375, 388
Alyaṇār	170	Āṇṭalai	251
Ājlvaka	58, 360	Asoka	58
Akanānūru 11, 15, 26, 27, 37,		Asōtai	254, 270, 273
72, 74, 76		Aṣṭāksara	71
Alliyam	65	Asuras	134, 136
Aḷumṭilvēl	339, 380	Asura (Bāṇa)	137
Ālamarcelvan	312	Aṭiyārkkunallār	65, 70, 77, 78,
Ālvārs	138	79, 82, 83, 409, 410, 414, 415,
Amarāvati	135	421
Amarāvati Sculpture	423	Āṭakamāṭam	54
Ambaṇavar	415	Āvanti	25, 29, 126, 373
Andhras	31	Āyakkaṇakkar	43, 380
Antari	213	Āyan	74
Antarakkōṭṭu	112	Ayirāṇi	139, 377
Araṅkam	191	Baladēva	226
Araṭṭancēṭṭi	395, 398	Balarāma	55, 56, 265, 267
Aravōṇ	176	Baṅgalar	38, 338
Arhats	187	Barata	315
Arivan	178, 191	Baratacēnāpatiyār	66, 80
Arjuna	303, 353	Bārati (Kāḷi)	136
Arukan Kōil	77, 82	Bava-Karaṇi	196

Bengal	38	375, 376, 382, 384, 386, 392,
Bhadrakālī	288	396, 400, 402, 428
Bhagavati	427, 428	Centil	323
Bbandarkar R. G.	56	Cērā kingdom	33
Bharati S. S.	13	Cēralātan	75, 382
Bharatanāṭyasāstra	66	Cēṭakkūṭumpi	395
Bhōgabhūmi	73, 173	Cevvaḷḷppālai	158
Brahmā	91, 207, 209, 214, 326	Ceyīrriyanār	66
Brahmana	122, 415, 335, 344	Ceylon	8, 17, 18, 38, 39, 400,
Brahmans	60		425, 428
Brahman Purōhita	72	Chengañūr	427
Buddha	51, 53, 176	Chōlamantalam	47
Buddha vihāra	360	Cilampāru	197
Buddhism	57	Cittiran	351
Buddhist	17, 58, 130	Clva	52
Cākkayan	372	Coorg	33, 181
Cākkaiyar	41	Coromandel	427
Cakōṭayal	422	Cupid	119, 132, 149, 156
Cālīni	23, 215	Cūra	137
Cālūkyā	27	Dakkiṇan	313
Campāpati	134	Dakṣiṇāmūrti	312
Candra	72	Dāruka	288
Cankaman	7, 87	Deccan	428
Cāntikkuttu	66	Dēsl	113
Cape Comorin	47, 382, 391	Dēslkam	108
Cāraṇas	71, 176, 184, 186, 187,	Dēvanti	383
	191, 249	Dēvantikai	393, 394, 396, 399,
Cattan	57, 85, 86, 87, 88		400, 401
Cattanār	10, 58, 76	Draupadi	426
Celīyan	298	Durgā	65, 207, 220, 313, 425,
Cemplan	98, 161, 373, 392		428
Cenkōṭu	323	Durgātēvi	427
Cenkūttuvan	7, 11, 14, 15, 17,	Dvārakā	271
	18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26,	Elynar	47, 62, 195, 203, 204,
	29, 30, 31, 34, 35, 36, 41, 42,		205, 209, 212, 213
	43, 44, 45, 54, 58, 60, 75, 76,	Enpērayam	40, 129
	77, 339, 351, 353, 354, 355,	Ērakam	54, 323
	356, 365, 366, 368, 371, 374,	Etṭi	44
		Etuttakkōḷvari	167

Fire-Cult	73	Jains	77
Gajabāhu	8, 17, 18, 39, 89, 400	Jainism	82
Gangā	345	Jāmbūdvipa	263
Gāngar	37, 38, 338	Jāyanta	64
Gānges	8, 20, 23, 29, 30, 32, 43, 60, 88, 135, 146, 192, 335, 338, 356, 382, 383, 384, 4027	Jinēndramālai	79
Gauri	20	Kaikkilal	63, 109, 159
Greeks	411	Kailāsa	134
Guptas	28	Kalañcus	114
Himalayan	192	Kāḷi	288, 427
Himalayan range	94	Kaliñkar	37, 338
Himalayas	21, 97, 125, 135, 307, 335, 336, 338, 341, 354, 355, 367, 376, 382, 389	Kaliñkattup-Paraṇi	80
Hinduism	78, 79	Kallāṭam	423
Hirahadagalli	10	Kaḷavu	63
Icai	1, 2	Kāma	103
Icalpāṭṭu	2	Kamākshi	55
Iḷam-Kōcar	89	Kamsā	137, 275
Iḷam-Tiraiyaṇ	11	Kanaka	8, 29, 31, 353, 355, 358, 365
Iḷancimaṇṇam	127	Kanakasabhai	30, 48, 77
Iḷaṅkō	75, 76, 78, 86, 87	Kāṇalvari	9
Iḷaṅkō-Aṭṭikaḷ	3, 15, 24, 42, 58, 65, 82, 88, 142	Kaṇci	10, 11, 33, 35, 48, 55
Iḷaṅkōvēṇmāḷ	42	Kaṇcuka-Mākkaḷ	41
Imayavarampaṇ	342, 400	Kaṇcukins	373
Indrā	56, 59, 60, 72, 101, 104, 133, 134, 136, 138, 176, 192, 199	Kaniska	29, 31, 32
Indrāṇi	65	Kaṇkūṭuvari	165
Indus valley	126	Kantukavari	9
Intrakāḷiyam	80	Kāṇvari	166
Iraiyaṇār Akapporāl	9	Kaṇyākumari	146
Iṭākiṇi	171	Kapilapuram	315
Iṭṭasiddi	196	Kapilar	76
Iṭumpil	375	Karikāla	15, 24, 26, 29, 35, 40, 143
Iyal	1, 114	Karikālaccolaṇ	3, 51
Jaina	54, 82, 130, 178	Karpu	63
		Kārttikai	313
		Karunāṭar	38, 338, 347
		Karuvūr	48, 49, 54,
		Kāṭcivari	167
		Kāṭṭiyar	338

Kaucikan	5	Koṭumbai	194
Kauravas	391	Kṛṣṇa	55, 65, 66, 128, 137,
Kauriyar	239		254, 268
Kauṣikan	218 219, 220	Kṣatriyas	57
Kautallya Arthasāstra	22 127	Kṣatriya-Būtam	300
Kavaṭapuram	50	Kuḷittalai	52
Kāvēri	24, 26, 52, 129, 136 144,	Kumarī	192 307, 359, 403
	146, 147, 153, 172, 176 177,	Kuṇavāyil	85
	181, 183, 184, 187, 248, 335,	Kuṇavāyirkōṭṭam	75, 82, 400
	388	Kuṇṭūrkūram	50
Kāvērlnāṭu	93	Kuraḷ	109
Kāvitimākkal	43	Kuṇavaḷ	106, 124
Kavunti	46, 51, 77, 178 180,	Kuravaḷkkūttu	2 6 55 66
	184, 185, 186, 187, 188 189	Kuṇavās	7, 86, 326 327
	191, 199, 200, 217, 227, 240,	Kūṭal	106
	246, 386	Kuṭaḷkkūttu	54
Kavunti-Aṭikal	53	Kuṭaku	399
Kavuntippaḷḷi	177	Kūṭal	91, 284
Kayavāku (Gajabāhu)	400	Kuṭanaṭu	91
Kīlarvarl	166	Kuṭamalal	206
Kiḷḷivaḷavan	361	Kuṭavar	358, 367
Kīrantal	309	Kuṭṭanāṭu	15, 33
Kuṇavar	331	Kūttas	114
Kōcar	37	Kuṭṭuvan	48, 345
Kōl	110	Kuṭṭuvancēral	14
Konkan	337	Kuyilāluvam	29, 374
Konkanar	338	Lakshmi	54, 95, 130, 132, 142,
Konkar	20		193, 207, 245, 267, 333
Konku	399	Leyden grant	24
Konkus	382	Maboti	57
Konkunāṭu	33, 37, 48, 89	Mācāttuvan	289, 383 385
Kōpperuntevi	258, 368	Mācāttar	426
Korkai	36, 42, 49, 50 51, 89,	Mātarl	53
	230, 288, 307	Magadha	29, 31, 122, 126, 373
Korravai	52, 54 55 316	Mahābaratha	9
Kōṭṭippālal	109	Mahāvamsa	17, 39
Kōṭṭam	71 75	Mahisāsusa	55 209 306
Koṭukōṭṭi	54, 65, 136	Mahālakshmi	55
Koṭukūr	20	Makarayāl	69

Malabar	427	Mayōn	52, 65
Malaimantalam	47	Mērcempālai	109
Malalnāṭu	7, 33	Mēru	93, 193, 206, 371
Malalpaṭukaṭam	423	Milalaikkūram	50
Mālati	169, 171	Mōkūr	20
Mālva	8, 25, 29, 30, 400, 428	Moon	170 173
Mānālkan	385	Muciri	48
Mānakkar	426	Mucukunta	35, 59, 123, 134
Mānkaṭu	193	Munrērkuraval	353
Maṇakkilī	26, 27, 28, 34	Murukan	2, 55, 65, 138, 324, 325
Māṇikkavācakar	423	Murukavēl-Kunram	7
Maṇimēkalai	8, 9, 18, 35, 54, 57, 58, 60, 76, 386, 393, 394, 403, 409.	Muttūrkkūram	50
Maṇipallavam	35	Mysore	20 38, 48
Maṇivaṇṇan	175	Naccinārkkīṇiyar	47, 83
Maṇkalā-Dēvi	395, 397	Nandas	25, 37
Māntaraṇ-Cēral	312	Nāṭaṅkaṭi	123
Maṇṭilams	112	Nallantuvaṇār	74
Marakkāl	65, 138	Nārada	135
Maravar	55, 62, 66, 123 203, 204, 299	Narriṇai	72
Marumakkattāyam	13 41	Nātakam	1, 2
Maruvūrppakkam	122, 123, 124	Nāṭakanūl	71
Māṭalan	18 21 23, 43 358, 361, 363, 364, 373 379, 395, 400	Nāṭkōl	70
Mātarī	5, 55, 58, 73 246, 247, 252, 263, 264 267, 271, 359, 383, 397, 398, 411	Nāṭukal	45
Matlvāṇar-Nāṭakat tamlinūl	80	Nērivāyil	21, 371
Matsya Purāna	31	Neṭṭiyōn	129, 305
Maturāpati	307, 308	Neṭuṇcellayan	36, 40, 42, 44, 50, 70, 318
Māuryas	25, 37	Neṭuvēl	232
Maya	99, 126	Nilalninrāṭal	65
Māyavaḷ (Durgā)	138	Nilgirls	7
Māyavaṇ	265, 267, 268, 269, 270, 275	Nilan	373, 375
Mayidavolu	10	Nilī	213, 315
		Nūrruvar Kāṇṇar	30, 349, 350, 364
		Oranaments	140
		Oṭṭa-Kūttar	80
		Ōviyaṇūl	72
		Pahruḷi	191

Pālai-Kautamanār	73	Perumpānar	415
Pālaiṭṭan	112	Perumpānārruppaṭai	11
Pālaiyan	20, 22, 361	Perunarklīl	8
Pallavas	10, 11, 27, 33, 51	Peruntēvi	287
Pāṭṭis	71	Pēyālvār	136
Pāṇars	67, 130, 415	Piṇaiyal	106
Paṇcapāratīyam	71	Piṇnai 6, 66, 265, 267, 269, 270
Paṇcāksara	71	Plṇṭērkuraval	353
Pancamarapu	80	Plṇṭi	106
Paṇcavan	288, 392	Plṇy	51
Pāṇi	105	Ponni (Kāverī)	293
Paṇṇiārṭṭram	421	Poraiyan	312, 361, 391, 392
Pans	114	Porunar	342
Pāṇṭaraṅkam	54, 65, 136	Porunānārruppaṭai	24, 423
Pāṇṭavā	426	Potiyil	51, 94, 104, 222, 232, 271, 335
Paṇṭyamāṇṭalam	47	Potuviyal	66, 107, 234
Paṇṭyan kīngdom	35, 49	Ptolemy	31, 52
Paṇṭiyūr	372	Pūm-Pukār	91, 114, 389, 390
Paraṇar	10, 14, 20, 23	Pakār	19, 27, 34, 35, 57, 59, 85, 93, 94, 99, 115, 120, 127, 134, 135, 136, 147, 148, 154, 162, 184, 189, 190, 218, 289, 384, 388, 389, 390, 392, 409, 410
Paratan	7	Punnātu	20, 33
Parimēlaiakar	145	Pūranānūru	11, 25, 26, 37, 48, 72, 74, 76
Paripāṭai	74	Puṇavarī	116
Pārvati	54, 326	Pūtacatukkam	56
Pāsaṇṭam	170	Raghava Aliyangaṇ M.	13, 48, 49, 54
Pāsaṇṭan (Cāttan)	396	Rāhu	131, 149
Pātam Viṇṭāṭai	65	Rāmāyaṇa	9, 23, 153
Patancall	56	Ratī	103
Pāṭinis	67	Rōkṇi	96
Patirrupattu	12, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 26, 73, 74, 76	Rudras	130
Paṭṭimaṇṭapam	126	Saiva	82
Paṭṭinaṇṭappākkam	123, 124	Saivism	78
Paṭṭinaṇṭappālai	24	Sākōṭams	190
Paṭṭinī	15, 17, 21, 22, 87
Paṭṭinīkkaṭavul	7, 8, 17, 90
Pāvaimaṇṭam	127
Periplus	51
Pēriyāl	69
Perumklīlī	90

Sakotayal	69	Tāram	109
Sakti worship	125	Telugus	38
Sangaman	315	Tennavan	387
Sarasvathi	54, 207	Tercclvari	167
Saravanam	196	Tēvanti	171, 172
Sāsta	51	Tēvāram	11
Sātakarni	30, 31	Tiruccendur	54
Sāttanār	7	Tiruccengōḍe	54
Sāttan	171, 333	Tirumāl	274, 275
Saturn	180	Tirumālkuṇṇam	195
Sāvakās	248, 249	Tirumāvaḷavan	125
Senkōtṭiyāl	69	Tirupati	135
Senkuṭṭuvan	8, 15 78	Tiruvorriyūr	427
Sevvali	195	Tivākaram	57
Sēyon	52	Tivyaprapantam	11
Siṅkaṇ	351	Tolkāppiyam	53, 63, 72, 74
Siṅkapuram	315	Tontaimantalam	47
Siva 22, 65, 74, 77, 78, 87, 101, 129, 132, 136, 205, 302 325, 336, 344, 346, 381		Tonṭi	48, 232
Sivētan	351	Travancore	48
Sōmakunṭam	173	Triccheṇkanūr	427
Srinivasa Iyengar, P. T.	82	Trivandrum	54
Subrahmanya 54, 74, 96, 101, 129, 137, 226, 322		Trivarga	88
Sun	173, 194	Tukku	105
Sūrya	72	Tulunātu	37
Sūryakunṭam	173	Tuṇaṅkai	62, 124
Sūtas	122	Tuṭi	65
Swamikannu Pillai 409, 410, 414		Tuṭikkūttu	54
Swamīnatha Aiyar Dr. V. 12, 78, 83		Ucalvari	9
Takkayākapparaṇi	80	Ujjain	25, 135
Talaikkōl 60, 64, 111, 234		Uḷvari	166
Talaiyālaṅkṇam	36	Umā	136, 336
Talakad	38	Uraippāṭṭu	9
Tālī	63	Uraiyūr 4, 8, 19, 28, 34, 35, 51, 90, 189, 191
Tanuttaran	351	Uraiyāciriyar (Ilampūranar)	9
		Urantal	162
		Uruttiran	351
		Uruttiran Kaṇṇanār	11
		Urvaci	64, 104, 135

Utiyañcēral	12	Vēdic Yajñas	73
Uttarakuru	99	Vēñkaṭam	135, 193, 403
Uttaraṇ	351	Veṇkuṇru	54
Vaccira	373	Vēlanpāṇi	331
Vaccirakkōṭṭam	128	Vēlāvikkō	379
Vacciranāṭu	125	Vēllilaimaṇram	126
Vaishnavism	78	Veṇṇil	15
Vaikai	5, 51	Veṇṇi	24
Valṣyabūtam	301	Vēṇmāl	371
Vaiṣyās	73, 316, 426	Venus	141, 180
Vajra	29, 170	Veṇvēlāṇ	387
Vajrakkōṭṭam	59	Vēr-Celiyan	361
Vālyōṇ	129	Verrivērceliyan	89
Vaḷḷaippaṭṭu	151	Vēttiyl	66, 107, 234
Vaḷḷi	55, 320	Vēṭṭuvavari	9, 55
Vāṇavan	367, 388	Vicittirāṇ	351
Vañci	25, 35, 41, 48, 272	Vijaya	8, 29, 31, 353, 355, 358, 365
Vañcikkaruvūr	15, 33, 49	Vilarippalai	109, 159
Vañcikkōṇ	294	Villavan Kōtai	337, 354, 379
Vañcimānakar	49	Vina	68
Vañcikkāṇṭam	402	Vindhya	135
Vāram	106, 112	Vinōtakkūttu	66
Vāraṇam	191	Viralis	67
Vari	106	Virakkal	45
Varities of Yāl	423	Viṣṇu	3, 6, 22, 74, 77, 78, 136, 138, 175, 193, 207, 208, 272, 331, 344, 398
Varōttamā	197	Viyalūr	375
Vārttikāṇ	313, 314	Yakṣas	71
Varuṇa	56, 72	Yāl	69, 190
Vasantamāla	144, 165, 167, 168, 200	Yama	132, 202
Vāsuki	206	Yamunā	269
Vaṭukās	38	Yāraṇam	189
Vaṭukarpūmi	38	Yavana-nātu	30
Vaṭuku	113	Yavanā	124, 229
Vaṭṭapēriyamman	427	Yavanās	120, 376
Vēdic	77
Vedic Sacrifices	130

Representing these facts in a more visual manner, the svarasthānas of the Tamil suddha scale will appear in the following places :

This scale approximates to the modern harikāmbhōji mēla and so it follows that the suddha scale of the ancient Tamils was harikāmbhōji.¹

It is interesting to note that the suddha scale of Bharata had the following sruti values :

4 3 2 4 4 3 2

It is evident from this that the tonic note of the Tamil scale was the fourth note or the madhyama of the scale of Bharata. The fourth note of Bharata's scale when taken as the tonic results in harikāmbhōji. We may say that the suddha scale of the ancient Tamils was the madhyama mūrchanā of sadja grāma just as the modern sāṅkarābharāṇa is the nisāda mūrchanā of sadja grāma. In other words, the suddha scale of Bharata is the pañcama mūrchanā of the suddha scale. That harikāmbhōji is the suddha-mēla of the ancient Tamils is a fact not hitherto noticed by many scholars. An analysis of paṇs reveals that a substantial number of them are in rāgas which are either derivatives of harikāmbhōji or are in rāgas which use a majority of svaras belonging to the harikāmbhōji scale. One merit of this scale is that the notes² figuring therein can be sounded pure and that one can stand on them for a length of

1 Harikāmbhōji takes the same notes as the major scale of European music except that B flat takes the place of B natural.

2 It is evident that these notes could not have belonged to one and the same octave.

time. There are other interesting facts in support of harikāmbhōji. The following sloka gives the names of the animals and birds whose cries approximated to the pitch of the sapta svaras :

ṣadjam mayūrō vadati gavastvṛṣabha bhasinaḥ |
ajāvikantu gāndhāram krouncaḥ kraṇati madhyamam ||
puṣpa sādharāṇē kālē pikaḥ kūjati pañcamam |
dhaivatam hr̥ṣatē vājī niṣadam bṛmhatē gajaḥ ||

Tamīl books associate the following animals and birds with the sapta svaras : வண்டு (beetle), கிளி (parrot), குதிரை (horse), யானை (elephant), குயில் (cuckoo), பசு (cow) and ஆடு (goat).

The fact that the notes of the suddha scale were compared to the cries of certain animals and birds is proof that our ancients had a conception of absolute pitch.

NAME OF THE SVARAS	SANSKRIT LIST	TAMIL LIST
Sa	Peacock	Beetle
Ri	Cow	Parrot
Ga	Goat	Horse
Ma	Heron	Elephant
Pa	Indian nightingale	Cuckoo
Dha	Horse	Cow
Ni	Elephant	Goat

A perusal of the above table reveals the fact that all except two are animals common to both lists. Since the sadja grāma is the pañcama mūrchana of the Tamil suddha scale, it will be found that the lists of animals and birds also agree in a corresponding manner except that the beetle and the parrot take the place of the heron and the cuckoo of the Sanskrit list. This list supplies more evidence to show that the suddha scale of the Tamils was the harikāmbhōji scale, viz. the madhyama mūrchanā of the sadja grāma.

RĀGAS

By the modal shift of tonic, seven mūrchanas or scales were derived. They are named: cempalai, paṭumalaippalai, cevvaḷippalai, arumpalai, kōṭippalai, viḷarippalai and mērcempalai. The initial (tonic) notes of these scales progress in the avarōhaṇa krama (downward series). The use and application of the seven pālais are seen in Canto iii, ii. 59-60 and ll. 70-1, and the commentary of Arumpatavuraḷiācīriyar thereon. It is said that when Mātavi sang, she well observed the four sātis: akani-laimarutam, puṇanilaimarutam, arukiyaṇmarutam and perukiyaṇmarutam and had an eye to the threefold iyakkam which may be rendered high, low, and middle pitch (Canto vii, ll. 35-44). The distinction of alakuṣ or srutis has been tabulated as follows :

Cempalai	...	4	4	3	2	4	3	2
Paṭumalaippalai	...	2	4	4	3	2	4	3
Cevvaḷippalai	...	3	2	4	4	3	2	4
Arumpalai	...	4	3	2	4	4	3	2
Kōṭippalai	...	2	4	3	2	4	4	3
Viḷarippalai	...	3	2	4	3	2	4	4
Mērcempalai	...	4	3	2	4	3	2	4

Four main pālais are referred to which correspond to derivative grāmas, and fresh scales were derived by the process of modal shift of tonic in each case. Campūrṇa rāgas (heptatonic scales) were called paṇ (பாண்) and varja rāgas (transilient scales) tīraṁ (தீர்ம்).

சிறைந்த நரம்பு சிகழும் பண்ணெனல்
குறைந்த நரம்பு திறமெனக் கொள்க.

Tīram is also used in the sense of an auṣava rāga (pentatonic scale). Paṇṇiarrīram signified a sodara rāga (hexatonic scale) and tīrattīram signified a svarantara rāga (a scale with four notes).

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

Music was always associated with dancing in ancient times. It is no wonder therefore that all the information we are given about ancient Tamil music is in connexion with the dances of Mātavi and the group dance recounted in a later canto of the Cilappatikaram. The treatment of music as a separate art, i.e. independent of its relation to dancing, is found only in later works.

A remarkable feature of the education of an actress, which began in her fifth year, was a thorough training in dancing and music. Among other things the young girl was trained to sing songs composed in foreign languages and to play on the yāl, the drum, and the flute. In addition to the drummer, lute player and flutist, there was the musician of honour or chief musician, and a composer of songs who improvised pieces suitable to all occasions. This bears great testimony to the creative mind of the composer. From the fact that a separate music master is mentioned we have to assume that this composer may or may not have been a musician himself, for it is said that verses composed by him were set to music by the musician. There is an elaborate description of the harpist and the harp in ll. 70-94 of 'Araṅkērukātai'. The passage in question has been rendered difficult of correct interpretation by Aṭiyārkunallār's not commenting on these lines except to give a few short notes, most of which are copied from the commentary of Arumpatavuraiyācīriyar. But with the materials available, it seems fairly certain that cakōṭayal was the kind of harp generally used on the stage by a debutante. It had fourteen major strings. The flute usually preceded the harp. In other words the song was started by the flutist and followed by the harpist. Then there was the beating of the maddalam, the kuṭamulaṭavu and the idakkai, one following the other. Idakkai was a musical instrument used for keeping time. Sometimes one and the same song was played on the harp and the flute at one and the same time.

Thus we see that instruments in those times were used for accompaniments. The three great instruments, viz. viṇa vēṇu and mirudangam, have their parallels in the yāl, kuḷal and maddalam of the Tamils. Since the range of the human voice was three octaves the compass of the stringed and wind instruments used for accompaniments was also of the same range. The three octaves were respectively called the mandavisai (lower octave or the mandra sthāyi), samanisai (middle octave or the madhya sthāyi) and vallisai (higher octave or the tāra sthāyi). The strings of the yāl were tuned to notes of absolute pitch and the instrument itself was played on open strings. It is evident that in addition to metallic strings of different varieties and thickness and density, gut must also have been used. Conclusions based solely on the lengths of the strings of the yāl in the absence of data relating to their nature, cross section, and density must necessarily be incorrect. The strings of the yāl were named after the notes to which they were tuned. This facilitated the playing of different rāgas by the modal shift of tonic. In the absence of facilities for the introduction of gāmakas, we have to conclude that the yāl produced only pure notes. The basic melody was played by the yāl player and the melody was adorned by gāmakas from the flute which also repeated the melody in the higher octave. In a medallion from the Amarāvati sculpture preserved in the archaeological gallery of the Madras Government Museum we see a woman playing the yāl, indicating that the instrument was very popular during the time of the Cilappatikaram and the centuries preceding it.

Varieties of Yāl. Mention has already been made of the cakōṭayāl which was usually a stage instrument. Among other kinds referred to are the pēriyāl as opposed to ciriyāl. The first was a large harp consisting of twenty-one strings while the second was a small harp with seven strings. Among the different varieties of yāl, these two seem to be very ancient. But in the early centuries of the Christian era we find reference to makara-yāl distinguished by seventeen strings and cakōṭayāl with fourteen strings. These yāls or harps were early in use. Here and there we meet with descriptions of them and of how they were sometimes inlaid with gems and kept in decorated cases. In other Caṅkam classics, like the Poruṇararūppaṭai, Malaipaṭukam and Kallāṭam, we find descriptions of yāl. One gathers from all these that the pēriyāl was a pretty instrument and was portable. Its twenty-one strings represented the three sthāyis of seven notes each.

The yāl and the vīṇa are not identical instruments. The former had no frets. The term vīṇa has been used by some writers to mean stringed instruments generally but latterly it has come to denote a stringed instrument with frets. Māṇikkavācakar says: 'இன்னிகை விணையர் யாழினர் ஒருபால்' and so it is clear that there were two distinct instruments. The yāl was a majestic and beautiful instrument and must have produced impressive and melodious music. It became obsolete some eight centuries ago. It ceased to be in use the moment the fretted vīṇa with its great musical possibilities appeared on the firmament of South Indian music.

The instrumentalists of those days seem to have reached a high standard of playing. Their finger technique, the skill with which they displayed the ghana naya bhavas, the wonderful command that they possessed over their instruments and the artistic finish of their performances are all echoed in the Cilappatikaram. The performers had their allotted seats on the stage.

PARALLEL IDEAS

There are many paralalled ideas in the ancient works on music in Tamil and Sanskrit. The similarities in the values of the sruti intervals and the names of animals and birds whose cries approximated to the seven notes have already been referred to. Ni was the first note in the yaḷ and it was to this same note that the string of the vīṇa was tuned in ancient times. The classifications of svaras into vadi, samvadi, anuvadi and vivadi have their correspondence in iṇai (இணை), kiḷai (கிணை), naṭṭu (நட்ட), and pakai (பகை) notes.

It is a pity that the beautiful musical system of the ancient Tamils is now lost. Even in the times of Aṭiyārkunallār it was quite forgotten. Some of the ancient paṇs are however still used in the recitals of the Tevaram hymns.

APPENDIX IV

THE PATTINI CULT THROUGH THE AGES

IN Ceylon, more than in India, the Pattini cult has continued for a long time. In the march of years many legends have grown round the origin and career of Kaṇṇaki, and the Sinhalese tradition is very different from what obtains in South India. In Ceylon Pattini has been regarded as Durgā with as many as eight Kālīs waiting in attendance on her. She causes and cures epidemics like smallpox, and so prayers are offered at her shrine.¹ One mode of prayer was the worship of the anklet symbol (cilampu) which was placed in a decorated vessel with the figure of a cobra moulded on it. There are works in Sinhalese entitled Calampa Kathava and Pattini Pidima dealing with the career of Pattini and the ritual of offering prayers to her.² The cult has become so popular that in one district alone, Jaffna, there are as many as a dozen temples to Pattini. Many miraculous deeds are attributed to her. It is not possible nor necessary to give all details concerning the cult in an appendix like this. One such miraculous deed was that when she planted her foot on a rock, there gushed forth a fountain of water.

H. Parker, the author of Ancient Ceylon, refers to this cult in more than one place. In the last portions of his book he records a tradition that Kaṇṇaki was reborn a demoness and entered Ceylon with two sons of the Pāṇṭyan king, notwithstanding the stout opposition from the four guardian deities of the island. We are told that this tradition has given rise to what is known as the Fire-Walking Ceremony conducted every year in her honour.¹

1 H. Parker, Ancient Ceylon, pp. 151, 161.

2 Cey. Ant., Vol. I, No. 2. p. 128.

Still another interesting story current in certain parts of Ceylon is that Kaṇṇaki was a daughter of the Pāṇṭyan King. Astrologers predicted that she would be the ruin of the Pāṇṭyan kingdom. The King who believed this put his daughter in a box and left it afloat on a river. Two members of the Vaiśya caste, who were merchants by profession, noticed this box and had it rescued. The names of these merchants were Maṇakkar and Mācāttar. The former adopted her as his daughter and the latter's son married her in course of time.² This tradition has special interest for us in South India as the Kōvalaṇ drama is still shown on the stage and very popularly attended. The Tamil dramatic representation has more or less adopted this Ceylonese tradition in its delineation of the early life of Kōvalaṇ and Kaṇṇaki.

This now leads us to inquire into the different turns which the epic episode of Kaṇṇaki has taken in South India.³ One is the association of this Pattinī cult with the Draupadī Ammaṇ festival, Draupadī being the chaste queen of the five Pāṇṭava brothers. Tradition affirms that she is one of the five kanyas whose names are daily remembered so as to keep the torchlight of morality even burning throughout the length and breadth of this land. Tamil tradition refers to Draupadī as aliyata pattinī, the eternal Pattinī or an incarnation of chastity. Later tradition has confounded the Kaṇṇaki cult with the Draupadī cult, and

1 Parker, op. cit., pp. 632-3.

2 Cey. Ant., Vol. VIII, No. 3. p. 252.

3 See M. Raghava Aiyangar's Cēran Cēṇkuṭṭuvan, pp. 141-

4: Āraiyccittokuti, pp. 238-40.

the whole thing has been treated as the Pattiṇi cult in general. Draupadiyamman Utsavam is a popular festival in Tamil India today, and in some places this is connected with a fire-walking ceremony.

That the Pattiṇi cult was once prevalent throughout South India is seen from the fact that even to the present day festivals in her honour are celebrated in a village on the outskirts of the town of Negapatam (Tanjore District) underneath a tree; in the region of Ārrūr (Madura District); and among the primitive Toda tribes in the-Nilgiris. Still more interesting is the story contained in a popular book entitled Kovalankatai attributed to a certain Pukalēntiyār. This is probably a composition of 300 or 400 years ago. There is a similar version in a manuscript in the Malayāla country, showing some agreement with the Kovalankatai. It is said that the Bhagavati worshipped in Chengaṇūr or Triccheṇkaṇūr in Malabar was none other than Kaṇṇakitēvi, who took the role of a Kālī, popularly known as Durgātēvi, and finally settled in Tiruvorriyūr, the northern limit of the city of Madras. She became known there as Vaṭṭapuriyamman. There is a separate shrine to the deity in the northern prakara of the famous Tiruvorriyūr temple, and every year a festival is held in her honour lasting for fifteen days. Local tradition affirms that in ancient days a goldsmith was regularly offered to this deity in connexion with this festival. But once a goldsmith poet praised the goddess in suitable terms and extracted a promise that an animal would thereafter be substituted. One conspicuous feature of this festival is that on the last day, the special pandal erected for the sacrifice is fired, as a symbolical representation of the burning down of Madura city by Kaṇṇaki. This only demonstrates how the cult spread from one part of the land to the other, from Malabar to Coromandel.

Much more interesting is the tradition by which the Bhagavati enshrined at Cranganore goes by the name of Orraimulaicci, the goddess with one breast. How and when this metamorphosis of the Pattinī cult into the Bhagavati and Kālī cult of a demoness took place, it is difficult to say at this distance of time. Though the text of the Cilappatikaram does not give us any hint on this point, yet by the time of Arumpatavuraiyācīriyar, this transformation had become an accomplished fact. He says in one place that Kaṇṇaki was born as Durgā. This is due to the fact, to hazard a guess, that as Kālī worship was popular in the Tamil land from the earliest times, the Pattinī cult had in course of time been intimately associated with it.

Whatever may have been the later developments of the cult, it is certain that immediately following the foundation of the first shrine to Pattinīdēvi by Ceṅkuṭṭuvan in the second century A.D., it was introduced into countries outside the Tamilnāṭu, like, Ceylon and Malva, and became a universal cult not only in South India and Ceylon but also in some parts of the Deccan.¹

1 Yet another distorted version of the story is found in M. Frere's Old Deccan Days (published in 1868 by John Murray, London) in a tale called 'Chandra's Vengeance'. Kovalan is called Koila, and Kaṇṇaki is Chandra. The story goes that Koila, son of a sowkar, was captivated by a dancing-girl called Moulee and had won the garland by which he became her husband. After dire circumstances, Koila and his wife reached Madura where an old milk-seller offered them hospitality. A jeweller of that place who had deprived the Rani of a bangle, accused Koila of stealing it and had him cut in twain. Chandra set fire to the city although the old milk-seller advised her to spare the purwari (residences of low castes). Then she sewed the two halves of the dead body and prayed to Śiva to give it life. Koila was resurrected and returned home with Chandra. (This is a version of the story told to Frere in Goa by an ayah. The ayah herself had heard it from her grandparents who were living in Calicut.)

INDEX

[Numbers: Page numbers]

Ādibūtam	299	Arumpatavuraiyācīriyar	78,
Agastya	64, 104, 135, 162	79, 80, 420
Agni	56	Aruntati	95, 97, 132
Almperum Kūlu	40, 129	Ārruvari	9
Alndra-Vyākaraṇam	196	Aryas	319, 338, 352
Alrāvata	128, 331	Aryans	63, 72
Airāvata temple	59	Arya Kings	352, 355, 356, 364,
Aiyai 5, 203, 209, 252, 253, 263,		373, 374, 377, 399
383, 386, 391		Aryavarta	383
Aiyyaikōṭṭam	2	Ānamalai	33
Aiyal-kumari	201	Ānporunai	48, 367, 375, 388
Aiyaṇār	170	Āṇṭalai	251
Ājlvaka	58, 360	Asoka	58
Akanānūru 11, 15, 26, 27, 37,		Asotai	254, 270, 273
72, 74, 76		Aṣṭāksara	71
Alliyam	65	Asuras	134, 136
Alumpilvēl	339, 380	Asura (Bāṇa)	137
Ālamarcelvan	312	Aṭiyārkkunallār	65, 70, 77, 78,
Ālvārs	138	79, 82, 83, 409, 410, 414, 415,
Amarāvati	135	421
Amarāvati Sculpture	423	Āṭakamāṭam	54
Ambaṇavar	415	Avanti	25, 29, 126, 373
Andhras	31	Āyakkaṇakkar	43, 380
Antari	213	Ayan	74
Antarakkōṭṭu	112	Ayirāṇi	139, 377
Araṅkam	191	Baladēva	226
Arattāncettī	395, 398	Balarāma	55, 56, 265, 267
Aravōṇ	176	Baṅgalar	38, 338
Arhats	187	Barata	315
Arivan	178, 191	Baratacēnāpatiyār	66, 80
Arjuna	303, 353	Bārati (Kāḷi)	136
Arukan Kōil	77, 82	Bava-Karaṇi	196

Bengal	38	375, 376, 382, 384, 386, 392,
Bhadrakālī	288	396, 400, 402, 428
Bhagavati	427, 428	Centil	323
Bbandarkar R. G.	56	Cērā kingdom	33
Bharati S. S.	13	Cēralātan	75, 382
Bharatanāṭyasāstra	66	Cēṭakkutumpi	395
Bhōgabhūmi	73, 173	Cevvaḷppālai	158
Brahmā	91, 207, 209, 214, 326	Ceyirriyanār	66
Brahmana	122, 415, 335, 344	Ceylon	8, 17, 18, 38, 39, 400,
Brahmans	60		425, 428
Brahman Purōhita	72	Chengañūr	427
Buddha	51, 53, 176	Chōlamanṭalam	47
Buddha vihāra	360	Cilampāru	197
Buddhism	57	Cittiran	351
Buddhist	17, 58, 130	Clva	52
Cākkayan	372	Coorg	33, 181
Cākkaiyar	41	Coromandel	427
Cakōṭayal	422	Cupid	119, 132, 149, 156
Cālīni	23, 215	Cūra	137
Cālūkyā	27	Dakkiṇan	313
Campāpati	134	Dakṣiṇāmūrti	312
Candra	72	Dāruka	288
Cankaman	7, 87	Deccan	428
Cāntikkuttu	66	Dēsl	113
Cape Comorin	47, 382, 391	Dēsikam	108
Cāraṇas	71, 176, 184, 186, 187,	Dēvanti	383
	191, 249	Dēvantikal	393, 394, 396, 399,
Čattan	57, 85, 86, 87, 88		400, 401
Čattanār	10, 58, 76	Draupadi	426
Čelliyan	298	Durgā	65, 207, 220, 313, 425,
Cemplan	98, 161, 373, 392		428
Cenkōṭu	323	Durgātēvi	427
Cenkuttuvan	7, 11, 14, 15, 17,	Dvārakā	271
	18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26,	Elyṇar	47, 62, 195, 203, 204,
	29, 30, 31, 34, 35, 36, 41, 42,		205, 209, 212, 213
	43, 44, 45, 54, 58, 60, 75, 76,	Enpēiṣyam	40, 129
	77, 339, 351, 353, 354, 355,	Ērakam	54, 323
	356, 365, 366, 368, 371, 374,	Etṭi	44
		Etuttukkōlvari	167

Fire-Cult	73	Jains	77
Gajabahu 8, 17, 18, 39, 89, 400		Jainism	82
Gangā	345	Jāmbūdvīpa	263
Gāngar	37, 38, 338	Jāyanta	64
Gānges 8, 20, 23, 29, 30, 32, 43, 60, 88, 135, 146, 192, 335, 338, 356, 382, 383, 384, 4027		Jīnēndramālai	79
Gauri	20	Kaikkīlai	63, 109, 159
Greeks	411	Kailāsa	134
Guptas	28	Kalañcus	114
Himalayan	192	Kāḷi	288, 427
Himalayan range	94	Kaliñkar	37, 338
Himalayas 21, 97, 125, 135, 307, 335, 336, 338, 341, 354, 355, 367, 376, 382, 389		Kaliñkattup-Paraṇi	80
Hinduism	78, 79	Kallātam	423
Hirahadagalli	10	Kaḷavu	63
Icai	1, 2	Kāma	103
Icalpāṭṭu	2	Kamākshi	55
Iḷam-Kōcar	89	Kamsā	137, 275
Iḷam-Tiraiyan	11	Kanaka 8, 29, 31, 353, 355, 358, 365
Iḷancimaṇṇam	127	Kanakasabhai	30, 48, 77
Iḷaṅkō	75, 76, 78, 86, 87	Kāṇalvari	9
Iḷaṅkō-Aṭṭikai 3, 15, 24, 42, 58, 65, 82, 88, 142		Kañci 10, 11, 33, 35, 48, 55
Iḷaṅkōvēṇmāḷ	42	Kañcuka-Mākkaḷ	41
Imayavarampan	342, 400	Kañcukins	373
Indrā 56, 59, 60, 72, 101, 104, 133, 134, 136, 138, 176, 192, 199		Kaniska	29, 31, 32
Indrāni	65	Kaṇkūṭuvari	165
Indus valley	126	Kantukavari	9
Intrakāḷiyam	80	Kāṇvari	166
Iraiyaṇār Akapporai	9	Kaṇyākumari	146
Iṭakini	171	Kapilapuram	315
Iṭṭasiddi	196	Kapilar	76
Iṭumpil	375	Karikāla 15, 24, 26, 29, 35, 40, 143
Iyal	1, 114	Karikālaccōlan	3, 51
Jaina	54, 82, 130, 178	Karpu	63
		Kārttikai	313
		Karunāṭar	38, 338, 347
		Karuvūr	48, 49, 54,
		Kāṭcivari	167
		Kāṭṭiyar	338

Kaucikan	5	Koṭumbai	194
Kauravas	391	Kṛṣṇa	55, 65, 66, 128, 137,
Kauriyar	239		254, 268
Kauśikan	218 219, 220	Kṣatriyas	57
Kautallya Arthasāstra	22 127	Kṣatriya-Būtam	300
Kavaṭapuram	50	Kuḷittalai	52
Kāvēri	24, 26, 52, 129, 136 144,	Kumarī	192 307, 359, 403
	146, 147, 153, 172, 176 177,	Kuṇavāyil	85
	181, 183, 184, 187, 248, 335,	Kuṇavāyirkōṭṭam	75, 82, 400
388		Kuṇtūrkūrram	50
Kāvērināṭu	93	Kuraḷ	109
Kāvitimākkal	43	Kuṇavai	106, 124
Kavunti	46, 51, 77, 178 180,	Kuravaikkūttu	2 6 55 66
	184, 185, 186, 187, 188 189	Kuṇavās	7, 86, 326 327
	191, 199, 200, 217, 227, 240,	Kūṭai	106
246, 386		Kuṭalkkūttu	54
Kavunti-Aṭikal	53	Kuṭaku	399
Kavuntippaḷi	177	Kūṭai	91, 284
Kayavāku (Gajābāhu)	400	Kuṭanaṭu	91
Kiḷarvarl	166	Kuṭamalai	206
Kiḷivaḷavan	361	Kuṭavar	358, 367
Kirantai	309	Kuṭṭanāṭu	15, 33
Kuṇavar	331	Kūttas	114
Kōcar	37	Kuṭṭuvan	48, 345
Kōl	110	Kuṭṭuvancēral	14
Konkan	337	Kuyilāluvam	29, 374
Koṇkanar	338	Lakṣmi	54, 95, 130, 132, 142,
Koṇkar	20		193, 207, 245, 267, 333
Koṇku	399	Leyden grant	24
Koṇkus	382	Māboti	57
Koṇkunāṭu	33, 37, 48, 89	Mācāttuvan	289, 383 385
Kōpperuntēvi	258, 368	Mācāttar	426
Korkai	36, 42, 49, 50 51, 89,	Mātarī	53
230, 288, 307		Magadha	29, 31, 122, 126, 373
Korravai	52, 54 55 316	Mahābaratha	9
Kōṭippālai	109	Mahāvamsa	17, 39
Kōṭṭam	71 75	Mahisāsusa	55 209 306
Koṭukōṭṭi	54, 65, 136	Mahālakṣmi	55
Koṭukūr	20	Makarayāḷ	69

Malabar	427	Mayōn	52, 65
Malaimantalam	47	Mērcempālai	109
Malalnātu	7, 33	Mēru	93, 193, 206, 371
Malalpaṭukaṭam	423	Miḷalaikkūram	50
Mālati	169, 171	Mōkūr	20
Mālva	8, 25, 29, 30, 400, 428	Moon	170 173
Mānākan	385	Muciri	48
Mānakkār	426	Mucukunta	35, 59, 123, 134
Mānkaṭu	193	Munrērkuraval	353
Maṇakkilī	26, 27, 28, 34	Murukan	2, 55, 65, 138, 324, 325
Mānikkavācakar	423	Murukavēl-Kunram	7
Maṇimēkalai	8, 9, 18, 35, 54, 57, 58, 60, 76, 386, 393, 394, 403, 409.	Muttūrkkūram	50
Maṇipallavam	35	Mysore	20 38, 48
Maṇivaṇṇan	175	Naccinārkkīniyar	47, 83
Maṇkalā-Dēvi	395, 397	Nandas	25, 37
Māntaraṇ-Cēral	312	Nāḷaṅkāṭi	123
Maṇṭilams	112	Nallantuvaṇār	74
Marakkāl	65, 138	Nārada	135
Maravar	55, 62, 66, 123 203, 204, 299	Narriṇai	72
Marumakkattāyam	13 41	Nātakam	1, 2
Maruvūrppakkam	122, 123, 124	Nāṭakanūl	71
Māṭalan	18 21 23, 43 358, 361, 363, 364, 373 379, 395, 400	Nāṭkōl	70
Mātarl	5, 55, 58, 73 246, 247, 252, 263, 264 267, 271, 359, 383, 397, 398, 411	Nāṭukal	45
Mativāṇar-Nāṭakat tamiḷnūl	80	Nērivāyil	21, 371
Matsya Purāna	31	Neṭṭiyōn	129, 305
Maturāpatl	307, 308	Neṭṭuṇcellayan	36, 40, 42, 44, 50, 70, 318
Māuryas	25, 37	Neṭṭuvēl	232
Maya	99, 126	Nilalninrāṭal	65
Māyavaḷ (Durgā)	138	Nilgiris	7
Māyavaṇ	265, 267, 268, 269, 270, 275	Nilan	373, 375
Mayidavolu	10	Nilī	213, 315
		Nūrruvar Kāṇṇar	30, 349, 350, 364
		Ornaments	140
		Oṭṭa-Kūttar	80
		Ōviyaṇūl	72
		Pahruḷi	191

Pālai-Kautamanār	73	Perumpānar	415
Pālaiṭṭan	112	Perumpānāruppaṭai	11
Pālaiyan	20, 22, 361	Perunarkilī	8
Pallavas	10, 11, 27, 33, 51	Peruntevi	287
Pāḷis	71	Pēyālvār	136
Pāṇars	67, 130, 415	Piṇaiyal	106
Pañcapāratīyam	71	Pinnai	6, 66, 265, 267, 269, 270
Pañcāksara	71	Plṇṇērkkuraval	353
Pancamarapu	80	Plṇṇi	106
Pañcavan	288, 392	Pilny	51
Pāṇi	105	Ponni (Kāvēri)	293
Paṇṇiarrīram	421	Poraiyan	312, 361, 391, 392
Pans	114	Porunar	342
Pāṇṭaraṅkam	54, 65, 136	Porunarāruppaṭai	24, 423
Pāṇṭavā	426	Potiyil	51, 94, 104, 222, 232, 271, 335
Pāṇṭyamāntalam	47	Potuvīyal	66, 107, 234
Pāṇṭyan kingdom	35, 49	Ptolemy	31, 52
Paṇalyūr	372	Pūm-Pukār	91, 114, 389, 390
Paraṇar	10, 14, 20, 23	Pakār	19, 27, 34, 35, 57, 59, 85, 93, 94, 99, 115, 120, 127, 134, 135, 136, 147, 148, 154, 162, 184, 189, 190, 218, 289, 384, 388, 389, 390, 392, 409, 410
Paratan	7	Punnātu	20, 33
Parimēlaḷakar	145	Pūranānūru	11, 25, 26, 37, 48, 72, 74, 76
Paripāṭai	74	Puṇavarī	116
Pārvati	54, 326	Pūtacatukkam	56
Pāsaṇṭam	170	Raghava Aiyangar M.	13, 48, 49, 54
Pāsaṇṭan (Cāttan)	396	Rāhu	131, 149
Pātam Viḷṇṭāṭai	65	Rāmāyaṇa	9, 23, 153
Patancali	56	Ratī	103
Pāṭinis	67	Rōkṇi	96
Paṭirrupattu	12, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 26, 73, 74, 76	Rudras	130
Paṭṭimaṇṭapam	126	Saiva	82
Paṭṭinaṇṭappākkam	123, 124	Saivism	78
Paṭṭinaṇṭappālai	24	Sakōtāma	190
Paṭṭinī	15, 17, 21, 22, 87
Paṭṭinīkkaṭavul	7, 8, 17, 90
Pāvaimaṇṭam	127
Periplus	51
Pēriyāl	69
Perumkilī	90

Sakōṭayal	69	Tāram	109
Sakti worship	125	Telugus	38
Sangaman	315	Tennavan	387
Sarasvathi	54, 207	Tērcclvarl	167
Saravanam	196	Tēvantl	171, 172
Sasta	51	Tēvāram	11
Sātakarnl	30, 31	Tiruccendur	54
Sāttanār	7	Tiruccengōḍe	54
Sāttan	171, 333	Tirumāl	274, 275
Saturn	180	Tirumālkuṇram	195
Sāvakās	248, 249	Tirumāvaḷavan	125
Senkōṭṭiyāl	69	Tirupati	135
Senkuṭṭuvan	8, 15 78	Tiruvorriyūr	427
Sevval	195	Tivākaram	57
Sēyon	52	Tivyaprapantam	11
Sinṅaṇ	351	Tolkāppiyam	53, 63, 72, 74
Sinṅapuram	315	Toṇṭaimaṇṭalam	47
Siva	22, 65, 74, 77, 78, 87, 101, 129, 132, 136, 205, 302 325, 336, 344, 346, 381	Toṇṭi	48, 232
Sivētan	351	Travancore	48
Sōmakunṭam	173	Triccheṇkanūr	427
Srinivasa Iyengar, P. T.	82	Trivandrum	54
Subrahmanya	54, 74, 96, 101, 129, 137, 226, 322	Trivarga	88
Sun	173, 194	Tūḱku	105
Sūrya	72	Tūḷunātu	37
Sūryakunṭam	173	Tuṇaṅkai	62, 124
Sūtas	122	Tuṭi	65
Swamikannu Pillai	409, 410, 414	Tuṭikkūttu	54
Swamīnatha Aiyar Dr. V.	12, 78, 83	Ucalvari	9
Takkayākapparaṇi	80	Ujjain	25, 135
Talaikkōl	60, 64, 111, 234	Uḷvari	166
Talaiyālaṅkṇam	36	Umā	136, 336
Talakad	38	Uraippāṭṭu	9
Wali	63	Uraiyūr	4, 8, 19, 28, 34, 35, 51, 90, 189, 191
Tanuttaran	351	Uraiyācīriyar (Ilampūranar)	9
		Urantal	162
		Uruttiran	351
		Uruttiran Kaṇṇanār	11
		Ūrvaci	64, 104, 135

Utiyañcēral	12	Vēdic Yajñas	73
Uttarakuru	99	Vēnkaṭam	135, 193, 403
Uttaraṇ	351	Veṅkuru	54
Vaccira	373	Vēlanpāṇi	331
Vaccirakkōṭṭam	128	Vēlavikkō	379
Vacciranātu	125	Vēllilaimaṇram	126
Vaishnavism	78	Vēṇṇil	15
Valkai	5, 51	Vēṇṇi	24
Valṣyabūtam	301	Vēṇmāl	371
Vaiṣyās	73, 316, 426	Venus	141, 180
Vajra	29, 170	Vēṇvēlan	387
Vajrakkōṭṭam	59	Vēr-Celiyan	361
Vālyōn	129	Verrivērceliyan	89
Vaḷḷaippaṭṭu	151	Vēṭṭiyal	66, 107, 234
Vaḷḷi	55, 320	Vēṭṭuvavari	9, 55
Vāṇavan	367, 388	Vicittiran	351
Vañci	25, 35, 41, 48, 272	Vijaya	8, 29, 31, 353, 355, 358, 365
Vañcikkaruvūr	15, 33, 49	Vīlarippalai	109, 159
Vañcikkōṇ	294	Villavan Kōtai	337, 354, 379
Vañcimānakar	49	Vina	68
Vañcikkāṇṭam	402	Vindhya	135
Vāram	106, 112	Vinōtakkūttu	66
Vāraṇam	191	Viralis	67
Vari	106	Virakkal	45
Varities of Yāl	423	Viṣṇu	3, 6, 22, 74, 77, 78, 136, 138, 175, 193, 207, 208, 272, 331, 344, 398
Varōttamā	197	Viyalūr	375
Vārttikāṇ	313, 314	Yakṣas	71
Varuṇa	56, 72	Yāl	69, 190
Vasantamāla	144, 165, 167, 168, 200	Yama	132, 202
Vāsuki	206	Yamunā	269
Vaṭukās	38	Yāraṇam	189
Vaṭukarpūmi	38	Yavana-nātu	30
Vaṭuku	113	Yavanā	124, 229
Vaṭṭapēriyamman	427	Yavanās	120, 376
Vēdic	77
Vedic Sacrifices	130

